Nashville offers a great number of cultural and professional opportunities to the Vanderbilt student. Known as the Music Capital of the world and the home of country music, the city has many local bars which showcase a multitude of musical talent. In addition, the city boasts its own symphony orchestra and ballet companies. Nashville is also the capital of Tennessee as well as being a center of commerce in the southeastern region.

Vanderbilt, located just two miles from downtown Nashville, resembles little of an urban university. Instead, the campus is plush with its park-like trees, flowers, and shrubs almost to the point of creating an entirely different world. Architecture on campus represents both tradition with Kirkland Hall, and innovation with the Owen School of Management building.

Winter transforms Vanderbilt's campus into a white wonderland complete with crystalline icicles on the trees and powdered snow on the ground. Winter also brings student hibernation as many undergraduates prefer the warmth of their dorm rooms or of the libraries to convening on Rand Wall or in the Commodore Room.

Spring Break came not a minute too early February 28-March 8. With midterm exam pressures preceding the break, it was a relief to get away from campus if only for a brief time. Some students visited New Orleans and participated in Mardi Gras that same week, while others found the beaches of the Bahamas and Cancun, Mexico attractive. And, there were still those who traveled to the slopes whether Colorado or Switzerland.

Spring, sunshine, and sliding are synonymous because the advent of spring almost always brings sunshine which influences students to spend more time participating in outside activities than with their school work. the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Foundation 1999). The prevalence of mental health problems in the UK is estimated to be 10% (Mental Health Foundation 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of people with mental health problems. The Department of Health (1999) has published a strategy for mental health care, which sets out the government's commitment to improve the lives of people with mental health problems. The strategy is based on the following principles:

- People with mental health problems should be treated as individuals, with their own needs and strengths.
- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to participate in decisions about their care.
- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to live in the community.

The strategy also sets out a number of targets for the improvement of mental health care. These include:

- Reducing the number of people with mental health problems who are admitted to hospital.
- Improving the quality of care for people with mental health problems.
- Increasing the number of people with mental health problems who are living in the community.

CONFLICTS ON CAMPUS

Vanderbilt's Year in Review

By Chris Crain

Vanderbilt University, as an institution of higher learning and as a collegial community of individuals, has long struggled with a number of issues related to the core of its educational purpose: "the enhancement of knowledge and the growth of the individual." (1986 Student Handbook)

Indeed, nearly every controversial campus issue arises out of that intellectual self-assignment, and it is the University's ability to meet that challenge that evinces its quality as an academic institution. But what makes this task most ominous is that the more closely a problem hits at the center of the University's mission, the more likely it is to be difficult to resolve.

To make matters worse, Vanderbilt University has not always shown itself to be willingly accepting of such challenges, and progress on issues that matter most can often be inexplicably slow. Some say, however, that Vanderbilt's conservative approach to its intellectual mission is an asset; that by waiting out experimentation elsewhere, Vanderbilt can apply solutions that have a higher likelihood of success. Certainly, the history of the University would suggest just such an approach.

But the times have been changing at Vanderbilt. No longer content with its image as the South's premier university (Duke has apparently abdicated that prize by losing any taste of Southern flavor), University administrators and members of the Board of Trust sound a singular goal: "Vanderbilt is to be a national institution." Or, even more frequently, "Vanderbilt will achieve ranking in the top echelon of American colleges and universities." Or, in English, "Vanderbilt will truly be the Harvard of the South."

Such national recognition cannot be achieved simply by improving physical facilities, planting flowers, and nabbing top-notch faculty. Even great strides toward higher admission requirements and modest increases in student services do not push a school into the national limelight.

Because despite all these accomplishments of Chancellor Joe B. Wyatt's administration, Vanderbilt University continued to grab national headlines and suffer internal preoccupation, over one nagging problem: the environment for minorities. This year more than ever, the name of Vanderbilt became synonymous with racial problems of some sort, whether it be racist vandalism or angry black protest.

The question for ambitious administrators and trustees alike was all too clear: how can Vanderbilt purport to truly be one of the best at "educational enhancement and individual growth" if its student body remains so homogenous that what few minorities do risk admission feel excluded and ignored? Tolerance, the key requirement for any serious intellectual discussion and achievement, appears subdued at best in the face of such incidents, and to the observer outside of the South, probably seems nonexistent. And waiting around for successful examples elsewhere simply won't do, because a top-tier university must lead, not follow.

The first incident of racial and ethnic intolerance occurred in late October, when student vandals twice destroyed the Jewish Student Union's commemorative sukkah, which was built to represent peace and brotherhood as well as to remind people of the poor and homeless.

One week later, two professors criticized media coverage of the attack and identified the incident in just the terms the administration would most heartily avoid.

COLLIER

"Knowledge of Judaism, and indeed of religions other than Christianity, and the number of Jewish students are at far lower levels at Vanderbilt than at schools to which Vanderbilt likes to be favorably compared," wrote Drs. Barbara Tsakiris and Jeremy Spinrad. "There is little hope of attracting Jewish students to Vanderbilt when events like the destruction of the sukkah happen on campus."

Jews at Vanderbilt were again the target of anti-semitic vandalism in late January, when Nazi swastikas were painted on the fraternity house of Zeta Beta Tau, a nationally Jewish fraternity. While many wrote off the incident as an ignorant fraternity prank, the outcry this time was much more significant. This time the Hustler responded in an editorial: "when we forget enough to use this emblem callously, then we have forgotten too much."

"Were the action taken Saturday direct anti-Semitism, that would be insidious enough. The truth is likely much worse, that a group used a symbol without appreciating that they were painting with the blood of more than six million people."

Many criticized what they considered a lukewarm response by ZBT, which would only quote from past complaints over a similar incident two years ago. ZBT, at Vanderbilt a predominantly Christian fraternity, shot back at its critics and later claimed that Vanderbilt is "a community filled with ignorance and prejudice." Another traditionally Jewish fraternity, Alpha Epsilon Pi, echoed now familiar concerns after the swastika-painting: "Until such attitudes and inaction are removed from this campus, Vanderbilt will continue to be unable to draw a representative cross section of society to the University to enhance all students' educational experiences."

Clearly, these incidents were hitting too close to home in Vanderbilt's ambitious efforts to be top-tier. As a result, Chancellor Wyatt and Provost Charles A. Kiesler issued an unprecedented press release 11 days after the swastika-painting. In it, Wyatt was quoted as saying, "I would like to think that the persons who painted the swastikas did so without realizing the seriousness of their act. But it represents religious intolerance at best, and it cannot be condoned."

"The University is absolutely clear that it will not accept intolerance or disrespect of others," Kiesler added. And though both administrators vowed to find and punish the perpetrators, no students were ever charged with the vandalism.

The Greek system remained the focus of the university's minority problems throughout the year. Many blacks complained that the Vanderbilt administration deliberately stalled efforts to admit a second traditionally black fraternity, Kappa Alpha Psi, on campus.

The black community split over the issue of rush integration. Alpha Kappa Alpha, one of Vanderbilt's two traditionally black sororities, sponsored a forum in December on the issue of whether all those interested in pledging a Greek organization should be required to visit all Greek houses. Current rush procedures do not require blacks joining traditionally black Greek organizations to visit traditionally white houses. Tanya Mitchell, Black Student Alliance president, argued that such a requirement would result in the "assimilation of blacks to the bland, overly-conservative, lily-white lifestyles of most Vanderbilt students."

That debate was overshadowed, however, by a January bombshell in the person of Michelle Alexander. Facing criticism from both blacks and whites, the black sophomore went through the entire sorority rush process and received a bid from Pi Beta Phi sorority. For the first time in the 83-year history of the Vanderbilt sorority system, a black had been admitted into a traditionally white sorority. Alexander played down the importance of her admission by saying, "I wish this wasn't a big deal. A great event is when it will be no big deal at all."

The Pi Phi issued a statement of non-discrimination and the addendum: "The Pi Phi is delighted to have Michelle."

But what Alexander and others hoped would point out positive changes in social attitudes, instead only emphasized the inability of the eight other traditionally white sororities to integrate. One sorority member, refusing to identify her affiliation, said "our alumni weren't ready to accept a black member. I think a great number of girls were surprised and shocked by the bias that was shown by their alumni." Another, on condition of anonymity, added, "I'm glad we didn't accept any black people. I doubt our chapter could have handled it. Only Pi Phi could have."

Wyatt and Kiesler tacitly agreed, and issued an edict to all campus fraternities and sororities requiring them to make "a good faith effort" to integrate or face elimination. In a press release accompanying the directive, the two administrators said they were pleased by the admission of Alexander into Pi Phi, but expressed "distress that it has taken this long, and that only one sorority has done so." As a result, no Greek organization would be allowed to register with the Community Affairs Board without a specific integration plan.

A number of Greeks sounded resistance to the order, complaining that integration was made next to impossible by the low number of minorities on campus. One black student admitted pleasure at witnessing the president of Kappa Alpha fraternity say in a television interview that the real problem at Vanderbilt was not integrating the Greek system, but the campus itself. Hints of rebellion were heard from within the administration's ranks as well. Sandy Stahl, director of fraternities and sororities, claimed that integration will depend on "whether or not black students want to go through rush."

Even the Hustler criticized the mandate for integration. In the very same edition it printed its editorial condemnation of the swastika painting, the newspaper labeled the directive an "impossible demand." Citing the low number of minorities on campus and the even lower number that participate in rush, the editorial concluded that "a true sense of welcome and community will never exist for minorities at Vanderbilt until blacks are visible in areas other than food services and plant operations." But the Hustler appeared to reverse itself later in the semester, when the CAB put in writing the administration's demands to Greek and non-Greek organizations. "The members of the CAB should be commended for producing a list of demands that is fair and thoughtful," an editorial intoned. "If this effort is to succeed, though, it must be followed through with more concrete action."

One clear voice of praise for the proposal came from the unlikely source of the United States Air Force. Anne Armstrong, who made headlines after she withdrew from Alpha Delta Pi sorority in 1983 over charges it discriminated against black rushees, wrote a letter to the Hustler after reading a notice of the mandate in The Washington Post. Armstrong, now enlisted in the Air Force, offered her congratulations to Wyatt and added, "please allow me to humbly hope that my efforts in 1983 had some little addition to what is happening on campus today."

Given an overwhelming amount of on-campus criticism of the proposal, however, some Greek organizations apparently decided to test the administration's resolve. Dean of Students Johan Madson said in a July article in The Tennessean, that a number of fraternities and sororities refused even to submit demographic information, suggesting "you guys figure out who is a minority." Such rebellion would not be tolerated, Madson said, issuing a stiff warning that if full demographic information and specific information plans were not submitted by the fall, these groups would be defunct. "They could continue as groups, but it would be tough because we own their houses."

Even the Vanderbilt faculty got in on the Greek-bashing action. In a near-unanimous vote in its May 5 meeting, the Faculty Senate passed a resolution calling for a new rush by 1988 which would guarantee membership to anyone interested. The resolution, to be considered in the fall by the CAB, was intended to prevent the exclusion of minorities. Senate chair Barry Lichter told The Tennessean that "the feeling among the faculty is that one mechanism to promote greater diversity is to egalitize the Greek system, so that fraternities and sororities no longer act as exclusive groups, like private country clubs."

Speaking of which, the chancellor came under increasing criticism for his university-paid membership in the Belle Meade Country Club, which has never had a minority member. Wrote sophomore Robert Hutton to the Hustler, "CHANCELLOR WYATT IS A HYPOCRITE ... Joe B. puts up a great front, appearing to be appalled by the University's social organizations being segregated. Yet Joe B. Wyatt is a member of Belle Meade Country Club, an all white social organization. Why doesn't Joe B. demand the integration of Belle Meade Country Club if he's so upset about racial inequality?"

That question became even more vexing after Wyatt pushed the University's Proxy Committee, which votes Vanderbilt's proxies on stockholdings, to urge General Electric Co. not to pay for executives' memberships in all white clubs. In an interview, Wyatt defended his membership by saying, "That membership has been one offered and held by every chancellor since the founding of the club. I'm not sure that my making a symbolic gesture [of resignation from the club] would help anyone. I don't know how much progress that club can make."

But where Wyatt hesitated to act, the Alumni Association did not, announcing that it will no longer hold alumni functions in clubs which discriminate and "recommending that the university adopt the same policy for university functions."

Concerns about the campus environment for minorities were not limited to the Greek system, however. In January, a majority of black undergraduates and faculty signed a manifesto which issued a series of demands of administration commitment in a number of areas. Black students and their sympathizers eventually joined together in protest, wearing white armbands and posting banners, criticizing the administration's lack of response to the manifesto's demands, which included an increase in the number of black undergraduates to five percent by 1988, an addition of ten black professors by 1988, the expansion of the African-American studies program and the inclusion of its courses in the College Program for Liberal Education, an increase in the number of books by black authors and about black history in the library, and the hiring of a black financial aid counselor and a black academic counselor in the Engineering School. Six days later, the appropriate commitments had been made, and the protest was called off. But not until a large protest banner, hung from the Bishop Johnson Black Cultural Center, was torn down twice by campus vandals.

The highly organized debate, masterminded by the Black Student Alliance, succeeded in both winning commitments from the lower-level administrators who would carry out the policies, but also in embarrassing top-level administrators such as Wyatt and Kiesler whose emphasis on Greek integration seemed misplaced after the protest. The manifesto included no demands on Greek integration, as a number of black students agreed with their white counterparts that, while the system should be open to all, a multicultural separate but equal Greek system was preferable.

Indeed, it was outside the Greek world where progress seemed more likely as the year progressed. Most heartening were figures on minority enrollment for the fall of 1987, up 21 percent over the previous fall's record-high numbers. Significantly, the number of black enrollees jumped from 51 in 1986 to 67 in 1987, an increase of 31 percent and exactly five percent of the estimated size of the freshman class. Kiesler gave credit where credit was partially due, saying the increase was due to "a great deal of hard work by everyone from the chancellor on down."

While Vanderbilt seemed mired in a struggle to bring tolerance to its educational mission, encouragement came from what appeared to be an increasingly intelligent student body. Hopes heightened that possessed with more expert intellectual equipment, each new round of students would come to expect the proper atmosphere for his or her academic development. In the numbers game, the University set an all-time record for applications as 6,986 high school seniors vied for membership in the 1986 freshman class. Just one year later, that new record was shattered, with 7,140 applicants for just 1,330 spaces. The SAT also boded well for 1987 freshmen; with increases from 559 to 564 in the verbal average and 618 to 630 in the math average. Only 53 percent of 1987 freshmen were from the South (one can only wonder how much closer to 50 percent that will be allowed to drop), with only 17 percent from Tennessee. Largest increases came from and Texas, as well.

Not to be outdone by its student body, the Vanderbilt faculty shone forth brightly as well. For only the second time in the University's history, a Vanderbilt professor won a Nobel Prize. Dr. Stanley Cohen, a biochemist, won the 1986 Nobel Prize for Medicine for his research with Dr. Rita Levi-Montalcini in cell growth. For weeks afterward, one could not escape from the ever-smiling visage of Dr. Cohen, who seemed to epitomize the reason we all were here.

"I'm grateful to the people in Sweden," Dr. Cohen said in one interview, "but I'm afraid the award does not mean something overwhelming to me. We (researchers) put together pieces of a puzzle; the more complicated the puzzle, the more fascinated we become. Every researcher likes being relevant. Besides satisfying my own mind, the thought that other people may be helped, well, that's just extra gravy."

Gravy indeed, as his groundbreaking research will help scientists worldwide discover new aspects of disease growth, wound healing, tumor healing and dementia. Applications of that research have already led to new treatments for the cornea (the clear covering over the eye) and skin burn injuries, as well as treatments for ulcers, sores and other maladies.

In addition to the Nobel, Cohen received the Albert Lasker Basic Medical Research Award, the National Medal of Science, a $100,000 prize from the General Motors Cancer Research Foundation and the Gairdner Foundation International Award. The Lasker Award is considered second only to the Nobel Prize, and though many Lasker winners have gone on to win the Nobel, only Cohen has won them both in the same year. Asked his wife's reaction to the incoming kudos, Dr. Cohen responded in typical style: "She is proud of me. I guess she thinks I'm a smart bugger."

Cohen was not the only trophy on what proved to be a rather encumbered mantle of the Vanderbilt University Medical Center. A number of breakthrough surgical procedures were tested for the first time in the University, including the first heart-lung transplant in Tennessee, the first pediatric heart transplant in Tennessee, and a first-of-its-kind brain graft operation in the United States. The latter procedure involved grafting cells of a patient's adrenal gland to the brain, eliminating, or at least controlling, the horrible effects of Parkinson's disease, which can cause stiffness of the limbs and uncontrollable muscle tremors. At last report, all patients were out of the hospital and doing fine.

Other Vanderbilt-affiliated scholars found nationwide acclaim as well. Diet guru Martin Katahn published his second bestseller, Rotation Plus, and a number of cities around the country held massive contests to see how many total pounds could be lost on Dr. Martin's magic formula. A Vanderbilt Divinity School alum, the Rev. Edward Malloy, was appointed the 16th president of the University of Notre Dame. His was the first appointment ever to that post awarded to a priest not educated in a Catholic university.

Another seemingly crowning academic achievement, the awarding of $6.65 million for the construction of a Free-Electron Laser Center for Biomedical and Materials Research, instead met with marked ambivalence. The funding for the project came from the Strategic Defense Initiative, better known as President Ronald Reagan's "Star Wars" program. The Vanderbilt research, to be headed by Richard Haglund and Norman Tolk, was to delve into how materials deteriorate in outer space.

Vanderbilt won the grant over the highly competitive likes of Harvard, MIT, Columbia, Northwestern, Baylor and the University of Utah, but many expressed outrage that the University would accept funding from such a controversial military project. Across the nation, more than 7,000 scientists at more than 90 universities joined in a boycott of SDI research. VU chemistry professor Joel Tellinghuisen argued in an open letter to the University that "scientists value their time and prefer doing science to writing polemics. But the SDI issue is a truly impressive one that deserves everyone's time: We stand at an important crossroads. And the President himself put us scientists in the thick of this one."

Another controversial step in the University's academic progress came with the founding in January of a non-profit corporation designed solely to solicit funding for faculty research projects. The Vanderbilt Research and Development Co.

sounded to some more like a corporate R&D department than a scholarly venture. A scare swept through the University faculty when University Treasurer William Spitz initially left open the possibility that the corporation might eventually accept classified research, presently prohibited to maintain an open academic environment. The administration responded to faculty concern over the statement in classic style, denying they had ever considered classified research, and putting the whole issue off on inaccurate media reports. The main reason for the corporation, originally Wyatt's idea, was put in unusually candid terms by Spitz: "Joe was part of a corporation in Massachusetts that developed and attracted capital for research — it was very successful."

A final measure of academic progress, and for some the final measure of administrative and faculty insensitivity, was the elimination of senior exemptions from final examinations. While several professors criticized the action for usurping the long-held right of faculty to determine course requirements, others lauded the change as a fist-to-the-groin to senioritis. Faculty members claimed that senior exemptions unfairly discriminated against underclassmen.

Contrary to popular belief, these challenges to that mission of "enhancement of knowledge and growth of the individual" came not only from within. For as much as some would have Vanderbilt exist as a world unto itself, the outside world of 1986-87 and all its accompanying problems happily marched through our newly renovated esplanade.

Clearly, the issue of the year — and the scourge of the decade — was the incurable disease of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, better known as AIDS. First attacking the seemingly closed communities of the homosexual and the habitual drug user, AIDS had by 1986 made terrifying inroads into the lives of normal heterosexuals. By April, more than 29,000 Americans had fallen victim to the deadly disease, with as many as two million exposed to the virus. Unless a cure is found, more than 20,000 year are expected to die by 1991. The media overflowed with countless stories of victims of the debilitating disease, and the accompanying social and ethical problems.

The Vanderbilt University Medical Center proved anxious to lead the attack against the virus, coordinating services and research for the entire region. In July 1987, President Reagan appointed a special AIDS commission to look into all aspects of the disease, and included on the distinguished panel was Colleen Conway-Welch, dean of the Vanderbilt School of Nursing.

Somewhat surprisingly, AIDS failed to touch the Vanderbilt student body during 1986-87, and pervasive warnings about safe sex and condom use went largely undiscussed on the campus.

Instead, another sex-related issue continued its frightening course. In a series of stories in the fall semester, the Hustler looked into the growing problems of pregnancy and abortion among Vanderbilt students. Student Health administrators estimated that an average of 60 to 80 students seek pregnancy testing each school year, with the number increasing annually. The newspaper told the story of one anonymous female student who shocked the campus with her seemingly callous attitude toward the ordeal of pregnancy and abortion. The student said that when she discovered she was two months pregnant she "felt so bad. I couldn't climb stairs, I was moody and always tired ... All I could think was 'My God, I have a child inside of me.' I felt irresponsible and disgusted ... I knew exactly what had to be done, because of all the things I wanted to do with my life. I knew I had made a mistake and thank God I could correct it. When you are pregnant you want to get rid of what's inside you and get on with your life."

The anonymous student had become pregnant after willingly having intercourse during a one-night stand with a friend she met at a fraternity party, but some students were not even that lucky. In February, a new organization called the Committee for the Prevention of Sexual Assault and Coercion coordinated an educational campaign about date rape. Under the slogan, "Acquaintance Rape: Ignorance of the Problem is Half the Problem," CPSAC provided the newspaper with anonymous victims and perpetrators of date rape, intended to increase awareness and encourage victims to seek help. While only one incident of date rape was reported to Vanderbilt Security this past year, surveys provided by CPSAC showed that as many as 25 percent of all female students were at one time or another coerced into intercourse.

Next to sex-related diseases and problems, the other perennial national problem reaching epic proportions was drug use. 1986-87 was the year of cocaine, and its derivative, crack. In a campuswide survey, almost 25 percent of the student body admitted using coke, but campus administrators and security officers denied there was a problem.

In a campus wide survey, almost 25 percent of the student body admitted using coke.

Again, the Hustler found anonymous students to tell the story. Reporter Rosser Newton won the Richard A. Geyer Award for excellence in campus journalism for his interview with student users on the ups and downs of cocaine addiction. The ups? "One of my favorite things to do when I am coked up is to drive my car really fast down the highway. It's like the best of both worlds: the coke makes me feel invincible and the actual speed makes me powerful." The downs? "Coke creates the grand illusion that you are powerful. You just want to do more and more. Sooner or later you are going to run out of time or heartbeats."

Despite their deadly significance, none of these problems managed to strike a blow in the seemingly impenetrable shield of Vanderbilt student apathy. The effort to excite students wasn't helped by the distinct lack of national or international controversies impacting on students as individuals. With President Reagan's foreign policy mired in the Iran-contra scandal, only the perennial issue of South African apartheid seemed to stir any interest. But even the controversy over University divestment of American companies doing business in South Africa, which ignited massive protest in recent years, managed only an impassioned whimper in 1986-87.

An October march sponsored by Van derbilt Against Apartheid managed to attract only 75 participants, less than half than marched just one year before. VAA faced internal problems by late fall semester, and twice reversed itself in a divisive debate over whether the call for divestment should be included as the purpose for the organization. In the end, the membership rejected the argument that one could oppose apartheid while advocating partial divestment, labeling such moderates as "paternalistic racists."

At the urging of VAA, the Student Senate considered in November a resolution calling upon Vanderbilt to fully divest, but it was defeated by a tie vote after heated debate.

By April, many students had apparently grown weary of the issue, and one VAA member was overheard to say, "I guess it's no fun to protest anymore," when seven students and a dog showed up for a "rally" on the steps of Kirkland Hall. Security police and administrators combed the area, fearing a rumored sit-in on Chancellor Wyatt's office.

The divestment cause received some powerful nationwide support in May, however, when the Rev. Leon Sullivan announced that his "Sullivan Principles for Racial Equality" should no longer be used as a standard of partial divestment in American companies remaining in South Africa. Sullivan called upon all institutions, including Vanderbilt, which use his principles as an investment guideline to join with him in fully divesting of all South African holdings. Treasurer Spitz said the Board of Trust would reconsider its policy in its October 1987 meeting, but he saw no added support for divestment.

But if students would not discuss the important issues of the day, people who would talk about them could be brought to the students, and that is just what a number of groups did very successfully. Charged with challenging what we all know to be a fairly apathetic campus to the social and political issues of the day, as we have seen, was no easy task. Student-run organizations like IMPACT, Martin Luther King, Jr. Lectures, SGA Speakers Committee, Holocaust Lectures and Women's Week all somehow managed to capture that goal with vigor.

The first major speaker of the year, however, was sponsored by none of those organizations, as U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III addressed the Vanderbilt Law School. Meese's address focused on the oft-repeated complaints of the Reagan administration about the shortcomings of the nation's criminal justice system, which Meese said "over the years, has obstructed our quest for truth." Meese — who would later face ethics investigations into several suspect business ties and what some saw as a less-than-vigorous search for the truth behind the paper-shredders of Lt. Col. Oliver North — said laws had begun to hinder rather than help the carriage of justice. Meese verbalized the sentiments of many Americans when he questioned whether accused criminals are not given more rights than their victims.

Just one month later, a highly distinguished panel of Vanderbilt Law School alumni returned to discuss their involvement in the Watergate scandal and its effect on the American political system. Included in the panel were Sen. James Sasser, Watergate Special Prosecutor James Neal, Watergate Minority Counsels Howard Liebengood and Fred Thompson, and former Assistant District Attorney for the District of Columbia Lawrence Barcella. Said Neal, "Watergate is a watershed in American history. It saw a Vice President plead guilty to a crime and resign. It saw the Attorney General of the United States convicted and imprisoned. And it saw the President of the United States impeached in the House and resign before conviction," but led to positive change, including the passage of the Ethics in Government Act.

from Meese's second in command, VU alumnus William Bradford Reynolds, who attacked Justice Thurgood Marshall's controversial contention that the country should not celebrate the Constitution's bicentennial without recognizing it as a basically faulty document.

Addressing the theme, "Facing the Evil: Witnesses, Heroes, Collaborators," the 1986 Holocaust Lecture Series managed to avoid the controversy surrounding it in previous years while still proving only too relevant to our present-day. Jon Karski, now a Georgetown University professor, told of his experience as a courier for the Polish anti-Nazi underground from 1942-43. Karski said he met on several occasions with major foreign dignitaries, including British Foreign Minister Anthony Eden and President Roosevelt, telling them of the atrocities being visited on European Jews. But that message was not delivered to the general public. The University community learned that insensitivity toward Jews was not confined to World War II, however, with several acts of vandalism against Jewish institutions on campus.

Another nationally recognized lecture series given spiritual and technical leadership by University Chaplain Rev. Beverly Asbury, the Martin Luther King, Jr. Lectures, was led in 1987 by a call for a multiracial Vanderbilt University from the Rev. James Lawson, who was expelled from the Vanderbilt Divinity School in 1958 for his participation in the Civil Rights Movement in Nashville. Lawson said Vanderbilt "must see itself becoming multiracial and multicultural...A great university will take students because they have the potential and the possibilities, not the financial abilities and the SATs."

Addressing the theme "Black and White Together: Overcoming Our Past, Creating Our Future," the series also featured Georgia State Sen. Julian Bond, author Will D. Campbell, and civil rights activists Hank and Rose Sanders. Bond reserved harsh criticism for what he saw as civil rights setbacks under the Reagan presidency, claiming that "while the general condition of blacks has improved, their relative condition has declined...Since King's death, we've come from Selma to Saigon, from the Ku Klux Klan to the neo-Nazis, and from the old George Wallace to the new Ronald Reagan."

It seemed...the most omnipresent group on campus...was Vanderbuddies.

Ronald Reagan remained the focus during the 1987 IMPACT Symposium, which assessed the contributions and shortcomings of the Reagan presidency and its future in the midst of the Iran/Contra scandal. The first night's program featured two former State Department spokesmen, Hodding Carter of the Carter administration and Bernard Kalb of the Reagan administration. Though some might have intended the program to be a debate, the two agreed on virtually everything, especially in their criticism of the president. Kalb resigned his post after the administration's Libyan "disinformation campaign" when spokesmen like Kalb were given false information on U.S./Libyan relations to put pressure on Moammar Ghadafi. About the Iran/Contra affair, Kalb said he was pleased with the heat placed on the Reagan administration. "There is a sense of outrage of most Americans and they are fighting against the manhandling of American values," Kalb said.

The second night featured Reagan imagemaker Michael Deaver, credited by most with developing the president's teflon resilience in the face of criticism. Deaver, who would later be investigated for perjury and ethics violations, told the audience of the packaging of a president. "We concentrated on a single theme, packaged the news and whenever possible provided intriguing visual effects. You have to stage it." UPI White House Bureau Chief Helen Thomas joined Deaver on the panel, but claimed the Iran/Contra scandal had permanently removed the president's teflon covering. "The Iran arms scandal has taken its toll and severely wounded the popularity of the president. It's doubtful that anyone involved will escape unscathed," she said.

The final night's program pitted U.S. Senator William Proxmire, New Republic Senior Editor Fred Barnes, historian Arthur Schlesinger, and Asst. Secretary of Defense Margo Carlisle. The topic was Reagan's domestic agenda, but the discussion focused on SDI. Schlesinger said Reagan has sold to the public a "kind of Astrodome built over the United States" that is scientifically impossible.

Barnes, reflecting his magazine's changing philosophy, defended Star Wars, saying it would be effective because it would create uncertainty among Soviet officials about how many missiles would get through. "Reagan needs a fight to revive his presidency; and, the American people want to be protected," Barnes said.

Proxmire chose, as is his custom, to focus on wasteful spending. Known for his "Golden Fleece Awards" given to the governmental departments responsible for the most wasteful spending projects, he warned that rising defense budgets under Reagan would spell economic disaster. "We're headed in a terribly dangerous direction. With a huge deficit and a flooded money supply, we may see a panic — a depression we haven't seen in 50 years," the senator said.

Women's Week celebrated its eleventh year with a keynote address by TV newswoman and author Linda Ellerbee. Ellerbee, host of the cancelled "Our World" program, left Vanderbilt after two years as a student.

Not all student groups suffered from declining interest; and, it seemed somewhat fitting that the most omnipresent group on campus last year was Vanderbuddies, the Greek philanthropic organization. Founded by Pi Beta Phi Laura Ponte the year before, Vanderbuddies continued its association with Buddies of Nashville and expanded its role to an advisory one as well.

Always accompanied by its catch-phrase: "Vanderbilt Greeks Care," Vanderbuddies took on the unlikely issue of drinking and driving. And while some laughed at the pot calling the kettle black, Ponte & Co. took out full-page newspaper ads and billboards to advertise its Homecoming message: "This Homecoming, make sure your friends come home." How does one pull off such a circumlocution? "'Alcohol Awareness' is a touchy issue," one advertisement said. "It's easy to become offended when a person or organization seems to be pushing an issue. We want to change your mind, but not your social life. The issues we address are not one of drinking, per se. A majority of people involved in Vanderbuddies are members of Greek organizations, groups that place considerable emphasis on lighthearted pursuits. It would therefore seem hypocritical for we, who drink, to caution you, 'don't.' That's not what we're doing. What we want is to see you have a great time ... and then see you in class the next morning."

But while Greeks tried on their newfound social conscience, a Vanderbilt tradition apparently fell victim to an administrator with blunders. Somehow, in her special way, Director of Fraternities and Sororities Sandy Stahl both refused to admit the existence of "pig run" and to eliminate it at the same time ("people lose control on bid day. The guys aren't saying 'yeah, you're in a sorority.' They're saying very uncomplimentary things.") the Panhellenic Council retained their resilience at the loss of its famed bid distribution system. Said one executive council member, "The excitement of bid days is not running through a bunch of boys. It's going to the houses, getting your jersey and being with sorority sisters."

Other Greek traditions continued, and continued successfully. Two favorites, the Phi Psi 500 bike race and Sigma Chi Derby Week, retained their enthusiastic supporters. Phi Kappa Psi fraternity met its $2,000 fundraising goal for the American

Diabetes Association as 58 teams competed in the annual event, more than tripling last year's participation. Although the mud pit seemed muddier than usual, participants did not seem to mind. One who got stitches quipped, "It was worth the injury." Race Chairman Richard Gross characterized it this way: "There were a lot of scraped knees and bruised butts. People said it was the mud that made the day such a success. Sometimes it's fun to act totally foolish and not worry about how you look."

Breaking tradition somewhat, no angry feminist voices complained about 1987's Derby Week sorority pledge competition, sponsored by Sigma Chi fraternity. And breaking tradition definitely, the independent team won the Greek-dominated athletic competition, followed by Delta Delta Delta sorority in second.

Back to that academic mission of "enhancement of knowledge and growth of the individual," the group charged with the task of punishing those guilty of scoffing that mission found itself scoffed at more times than not. The Undergraduate Honor Council, the student organization which polices adherence to the University honor code, languished in a continuing controversy over its membership selection. Since its founding, this oldest of all Vanderbilt student groups has been elected by the student body, so that it may truly represent a jury of peers in trials over honor code violations. In January 1986, the group slipped an amendment of its constitution eliminating that process in with a list of housekeeping amendments voted on during Spring registration. The amendment called for selection of members by a committee of the current Council president and vice president, outgoing president, adviser Dean James Sandlin and two faculty members. The amendment passed, and thus followed a very open, angry debate over whether students knew what they were voting on, and whether once-informed they could be given a chance at a revote.

Though the Honor Council routinely renders judgment on its peers, it seemed unwilling to accept in kind and chose to ignore a student survey taken during 1986 SGA elections. More than 63 percent voting said they wanted a revote, with only 20 percent opposing one. Then-president of the Council John Madden said the poll was biased because of Hustler coverage beforehand.

Nine months later, Honor Council member Andrew Ball went public with his opinion that the selection system was stifling open discussion within the Council and made it unwilling to change. Madden tried to kill a report by Ball, also Student Government Association Issues Analyst, that was highly critical of the selection system. "Selection is wrong because it causes members who are selected to feel obligated to vote with those who select them. They feel like they cannot make a free judgment." Despite the seriousness of the charges, Madden defended selection and initially hinted he might try to seek impeachment charges against Ball.

Undaunted, Madden and SGA President Thad Westhusing decided to conduct a second poll of the students, and although it had the Council's support, it would again prove non-binding and a demand for a revote would not necessarily result in one. The poll, taken during 1987 Spring registration, showed 38 percent favoring a compromise process in which students elect Council members from a slate selected by a student-faculty committee; 33 percent favoring outright direct elections; and just 29 percent favoring the current selection process. Despite the overwhelming numbers calling for more student involvement in Honor Council selection, new Council president Colin Luke said he read the poll as a dead heat and that "those proposals were just general guidelines." A Hustler editorial came out strongly against Luke's interpretation, with the editor challenging, "We reject his casual interpretation...To reduce the validity of this poll is negligent at best and hypocritical at worst...We hope that as the members of the Honor Council sit back and carefully review the results of the recent poll, that which is glaringly obvious to most students will become as apparent to them."

The students weren't the only ones upset with the Council, either. Faculty members had long-standing complaints that all-student juries were not doling out punishments harsh enough to fit the crimes. Students the professors felt should be expelled were simply failed in a course. The chancellor charged a University committee, chaired by Political Science professor Robert Birkby, to review the entire honor code process and issue recommendations. The committee's bombshell report came two months after the school year ended but its aftershock is sure to be felt in the fall of 1987. The committee recommended, among other things, that faculty members sit on the Honor Council with students and have voting rights on questions of guilt and punishment. Luke proved as capable of rejecting faculty opinion as student opinion, and vowed to fight implementation of the recommendation. Provost Kiesler claimed Wyatt had final say on the subject, but that he was still considering options.

The two major organizations still holding student elections did not exactly prove the merit of those processes during the 1986-87 year, however. Both the SGA and Interhall found themselves caught in an election controversy that led both to hold revotes which eventually changed election outcomes.

For the Student Government Association, the controversy swirled around presidential candidate Walt Massey, who was disqualified by the Election Conduct Board for not reporting a campaign expense and exceeding spending limits. Massey, who had placed second in the primary behind Paul Moore, was reinstated for the general election ballot after he demanded a retrial, claiming SGA Attorney General Susan Peppers had incorrectly told Conduct Board members they must vote unanimously to find him innocent or guilty. That reinstatement led Moore and third-place candidate David Andress to challenge the Conduct Board's legitimacy, because one of its four members signed Massey's petition for office, a violation of neutrality. With that board member's resignation, a third trial was held the night before the scheduled general election, the Conduct Board reversed itself again, and Massey was once again disqualified.

Worried students would be confused over the disqualification/reinstatement/disqualification; and the Conduct Board postponed the election one week to give Andress time to campaign. Some students were dissatisfied, however, and 367 of them signed a petition calling for a rerun of the whole process, letting even fourth-place candidate David Chamblee back into the contest. The Student Senate (newly renamed from the Undergraduate Legislative Council) rejected the proposal. Finally, the general election was held, and Moore defeated Andress by a tally of 655 to 619.

Interhall, which during recent years is better known for its screwball elections than campus achievements, provided the most controversial election yet in 1986-87. It all started quietly enough. With almost no pre-election publicity, only 308 students voted for one of the three candidates in the primary election for Interhall president. Third-place candidate James Gilman, who received just 30 votes, set the tone for the election by challenging that "the nature of the whole business of the election was unorganized and unprofessionally done."

Five days later, Laurie Fisher was elected president in the run-off by a margin of 326 to 292 over Elizabeth Smith. Smith then filed a complaint alleging Fisher supporters illegally campaigned within 25 feet of ballot boxes and possibly stuffed ballots during the run-off election. Smith claimed the election had been "conducted in an improper and unfair manner" and charged Interhall secretary Denise Urzendowski and Carter Bevis, both Alpha Omicron Pi sorority sisters of Fisher's, with telling students to "vote Fish" while working election booths.

Interhall ordered a revote based on Smith's complaint; and Urzendowski issued her resignation, citing "poor handling" of Smith's accusations against her. "I may be misinformed, but I had always believed that the defendant maintained the presumption of innocence," Urzendowski wrote in her resignation letter. She added her disagreement with the postponement of the run-off to allow additional campaigning. "Perhaps Smith demands additional campaign time because she questions whether she would have truly won. Regardless of the final results, Interhall has a diminished reputation on campus." Whatever the reasons, Smith did win the revote, beating Fisher 373 votes to 250.

Several student organizations managed the seemingly-unheard of feat of selecting leaders and managing major accomplishments. Vanderbilt Student Communications, Inc., completed another highly successful, if not uncontroversial, year. Vanderbilt student media tackled the task of informing and challenging the University community. And while The Vanderbilt Hustler, Versus, The Vanderbilt Review, The Vanderbilt Commodore, WRVU 91-Rock, Vanderbilt Video Productions and the Undergraduate Review may not have always won friends, they certainly won their share of kudos.

The student newspaper captured honors for editorial and feature writing; and Versus won best all-around magazine in the Sigma Delta Chi regional journalism awards. The Hustler also managed "All American" honors from the Associated Collegiate Press, along with an unprecedented five marks of national distinction. Versus captured the same honors, as well as a "Pace-maker," awarded by ACP and the National Scholastic Press Association to the top three student magazines in the country. The Commodore continued its dominance of the yearbook world, pulling off Hunter Publishing's "Printer's Award." WRVU continued its expansion with studio renovations and the installation of a new control board. Despite copyright problems, Vanderbilt Video Productions prepared its second annual video yearbook. And, perhaps most impressively, The Vanderbilt Review won an interview with Robert Penn Warren, VU alum and poet laureate of the United States of America.

While SGA and Interhall had struggled simply to replace their own leadership, the problems that they were created to combat only worsened during 1986-87. And while some of the problems students face at Vanderbilt appear superficial, each creates distraction from that stated core purpose of personal growth and intellectual enhancement.

The most often repeated (and unheeded) complaint students make to the Vanderbilt administration deals with the cost of a Vanderbilt education. While students recognize the University provides a high quality education and countless extracurricular and social opportunities, the question remains: do we get our money's worth out of Vanderbilt?

For the answer to that question to remain "yes" next year (assuming it was "yes" last year), Vanderbilt better provide an education that is about 12.9 percent better than last year, housing that is about 10 percent better than last year, about 8.9 percent more extracurricular activities and about four times as many parking spaces. Because that's how much extra each of those categories will demand from student/parent pocketbooks.

Stung by harsh criticism after recent years of tuition increases, Provost Kiesler decided in 1986 that the best way to deflect complaints was to inundate potential critics with enough charts, graphs and figures that disputes over how much money is coming from and going to wherever is rendered meaningless. The press release accompanying the tuition increase (from $9,300 to $10,500) was almost a rerun of 1986: "In spite of this increase, we still believe Vanderbilt is a relative bargain." If Kiesler sounded a little like he was preaching to heathens, it's probably because tuition has increased from $6,100 to $10,500 in the five years since Wyatt has been chancellor, an astronomical increase compared with previous years.

Excuses for the increase remained the same as well: with $5.1 million promised in faculty salaries (difficult for anyone to criticize), $1 million to educational computing, $1.5 million to library expansion, and the rest to improved security, minorities, women and curriculum expansion. "Simply to maintain the high quality of the education we now offer would, in today's increasingly competitive university environment, require significantly increased costs," Kiesler argued. "To realize our potential to provide an even better educational experience will require additional funds."

If that sounds more like a pitch for a business investment than an educational investment, there's good reason. The 1987 tuition, like every other year, is determined by what the competitor (Duke, et al.) is charging. Rhetoric to the contrary aside, the University sets its tuition before the deans report the educational needs for the upcoming year.

As bad as the tuition problem may have seemed, housing was the more discussed student service deficiency of the year. Housing costs skyrocketed another 10 percent, and another fourth of the student body was forced to like it or leave it. The increase was attributed to mundane costs like utilities and debt service, and little effort was made to defend it by arguing an increase in quality. Vanderbilt dorms stayed Vanderbilt dorms.

To make matters worse, juniors were told that, along with sophomores and freshmen, they would no longer be allowed to live off-campus. Housing Director Steven Caldwell threw up his hands about the whole situation, saying if any juniors were allowed to live off-campus, the rest of the students would have to pay even higher housing costs. "I don't know of any other way to do it," Caldwell said. Interhall was predictable in its response, as the organization is known more for its defense of housing policy than its lobbying for what its constituents want. "Initially our reaction was less than positive," said Interhall President Julie McConchie. "But as unfair as this restriction may be, it's the best solution." SGA's Westhusing at least said it was "unfair" that students are forced to live in sub-par dormitories and suggested that Housing consider alternative sources of revenue for renovations and other costs.

Ironically, when lottery time came around, the fruits of Caldwell's labors were clear. Instead of vacancies, there were 146 students on waiting lists for dormitory rooms. Caldwell's response to their dilemma was less than sympathetic: "I don't think any of you will end up in a lounge, but it's entirely possible that you will." Perfecting Wyatt doublespeak, Caldwell told students not to complain, "every other school is like we are."

Solutions to student service problems weren't forthcoming in 1986-87, but the administration enticed the students along a number of lines.

Most successful was the renovations completed in the fall semester to Rand Hall. Due significantly to student pressure, the University spent $22 million remodeling the cafeteria, Commodore room and bookstore. While no one shouted kudos for a supposed increase in food quality, the atmosphere seemed a vast improvement. Not all were impressed, however. Wrote third-year law student Tom Clear to the Hustler, "if it was their intention to replicate the Third National Bank employee cafeteria, they succeeded. And what better setting for Vanderbilt students — a setting modern without being interesting, redolent of the corporate world...See you at Mack's."

Another perennial problem, parking, had a readymade solution repeated for years and years by Vanderbilt students to their administration: a parking garage. In January, Chancellor "Vanderbilt has no parking problem" Wyatt announced the construction of, what else, a six-level, 725-space parking garage adjacent to Memorial Gymnasium. But should such an expensive undertaking be misconstrued as being for the students' benefit, the garage was sold as an enhancement to Vanderbilt's athletic program, and half the spaces were reserved for alumni attending football and basketball games. Those spaces would be rented at $60 a month, with the other half somehow distributed to students, faculty and staff during the off-season. To top the whole thing off is a 10,000 square foot club open only to members of the Commodore Club.

Given 1986-87 passed during the height of the fitness decade, it was no surprise that a proposed student recreation center was a top priority for many students. Student leaders agreed in the summer of 1986 that students could pay a "recreation fee" of $200 a year to pay for construction of the complex, which was designed by a top architectural firm. Among a number of schools building similar centers, Vanderbilt was unprecedented in its demand that students pay for more than half the cost of construction.

Apparently, that wasn't enough. After an unsuccessful year of what some considered half-hearted attempts at attracting alumni funding — one insider said Wyatt approached only one potential donor — the administration demanded a referendum be conducted to see whether the students would pay for everything. The vote, which will be held in the fall of 1987, offers three options: $285 a year (construction begins immediately); $195 a year (construction begins when donor money is found to cover the rest); $0 (no student gymnasium). The only thing crazier than the prospect of students paying an enormous sum for a facility the University ought to construct was the distinct possibility that the affluent student body would agree to the financial rape. However, the entire facility will be student run. So, now at least, the "average Joe" will have a say in University policy.

On the varsity level, Vanderbilt athletics proved to be a year of unfulfilled promise as well. The highly vaunted return of Watson Brown to guide the ailing football Commodores scored top on that jinxed wishlist. For the first time in this decade, the Commodores went through the campaign with just one win in eleven attempts. Yet that one win over Duke proved that the young Commodores had the ability to dominate an opponent. Furthermore, Vanderbilt students could now boast that their team had won the "SAT Bowl."

But Vanderbilt has been more synonymous with basketball than football, and 1986-87 mens' and womens' squads did not disappoint.

Coach C.M. Newton conducted an exciting, upset-filled campaign that brought his boys one step closer to that elusive NCAA tournament bid. The Commodores swept through their first ten games with a 9-1 record, and scored a historic upset of eventual national champion Indiana. And, the Commodores' season did not end with the SEC tournament, as the men's team won a ticket to the National Invitational Tournament.

The Lady Commodores again proved their performance was better than their crowd attendance by winning a second-straight bid to the NCAA tournament.

The baseball Commodores struggled through what proved to be a rebuilding year for the squad, sometimes playing much better than their 29-25 overall record. The Commodores' play was sprinkled with brilliance, including a three-game sweep of 11th-ranked Alabama, 9-3, 9-4, and 8-7.

The biggest question of 1987 facing all Vanderbilt students concerned the worth of a Vanderbilt education. As tuition skyrocketed and fees increased, apathy and discrimination remained solid in the framework of the University. Only a few bright stars shown for this year of conflict and change. □

By Richard Lawrence

Racial discrimination has been an issue at Vanderbilt since the University first admitted black students in the early 1950s. While Vanderbilt's racial problems were relatively dormant during the fall of 1986, in the spring they became the subject of discussion both on and off campus. The racial situation at Vanderbilt during 1987 involved problems, publicity and progress.

The problems had been around for a long time. Blacks made up less than two percent of the student population. There were virtually no blacks in the faculty and administration. During the 83 years sororities had been at Vanderbilt, no traditionally white sorority had ever admitted a black, and few blacks had ever pledged mostly white fraternities.

The publicity about these problems was caused not by a case of discrimination, but by the integration of a traditionally white sorority. When Michelle Alexander, a black student, pledged the Pi Beta Phi sorority, the event not only got front page coverage by the Vanderbilt Hustler, but got attention from the local, state and national media. The coverage led the University administration to give more consideration to the issue of integration.

"It brought attention to the issue," said Johan Madson, associate provost and dean of students. Madson is also the chair of the Community Affairs Board, the committee that registers and makes rules for campus organizations.

However, some students did not think Alexander's pledging was a particularly important event. "Just getting one black girl in one sorority is not integrating the Greek system," said Tanya Mitchell, president of the Black Student Alliance.

Apparently the administration agreed with Mitchell. On January 20, Chancellor Joe B. Wyatt and Provost Charles A. Kiesler sent a letter to Madson asking the CAB to require all fraternities and sororities to make a good faith effort to integrate their membership.

The CAB responded with a letter to all campus organizations, asking them to list their "policies and practices with regard to membership recruitment and selection," as well as their plans to "insure that all students will feel welcome with [the] group."

The groups were also asked for information about alumni involvement in the group, the number of minority students who had already joined the group, and any of the group's "traditional activities" that might be "racially or culturally insensitive."

"We wanted to be sure that groups not just comply with the letter of the law, but also comply with the intent and spirit of the law," said Madson.

The letter required all organizations to submit their response by May 1, but said that those submitting applications by April 13 would be considered at the CAB's April 23 meeting. The remainder would be considered in the fall.

Of the 19 organizations that applied early, 11 were told that the information they provided "was insufficient to show the group does not discriminate," Madson said. These groups, which include the Honor Council, the Law Review, and WRVU radio station, must reapply in the fall.

Many of the groups were rejected for not providing a sufficient answer to question number five, which asked whether the group would be willing to participate in event that address minority concerns.

None of the main objects of the letter, the fraternities and sororities, applied early.

Even as Vanderbilt was asking campus groups to integrate, one campus group was doing the same to the University. On January 7, the Black Student Alliance held a general meeting to discuss a proposal to protest against racial discrimination.

Because of low turnout at that meeting, the BSA called "an emergency meeting of all black students," according to Mitchell. Some students at the meeting wanted the BSA to begin protesting immediately, but the majority did not. Instead, the BSA decided to wait and see what Chancellor Wyatt said at a BSA-sponsored brown bag luncheon January 15.

- 10 Black professors with at least 5 being tenure-track distributed as follows: 4 in the College of Arts and Sciences, 4 in the Engineering School, 2 in George Peabody College by Fall 1988.
- A Black Engineering Academic Counselor/Advisor and Director of Minority Engineering Program by Fall 1987.
- A Financial Counselor by Fall 1987.
- An expanded African-American Studies Program by Fall 1988.
- Incorporation of African-American courses into the College Program for Liberal Education (CPLE) by Fall 1987.
- Increased undergraduate population to 5% Black by Fall 1988.
- Additional works by Black authors and about Black history and culture in the libraries by Fall 1988.

"We had decided to wait on the outcome of this brown-bag luncheon," Mitchell said. "We were able to see what the Chancellor said was being done, and we felt their needed to be some dramatic changes."

The BSA prepared a manifesto for the administration. Their demands included ten black professors with five on tenure track, a financial counselor for minority students, an expanded Afro-American Studies program, Afro-American courses in the College Program for Liberal Education, and an increase of the black student population to five percent of the total student body.

The BSA collected 163 signatures on their manifesto, which they sent to 11 different campus administrators, including Wyatt, Kiesler, Madson, and the deans of each of the undergraduate schools.

On January 29, the BSA held a forum entitled "Vanderbilt's Unfulfilled Promise: Commitment to Minority Students." At the forum the BSA asked for a February 28 deadline for written responses to the manifesto.

"We told them that we wanted something in writing," Mitchell said. "Instead of these just being proposals, we wanted them to be objectives." Too often in the past administrators have made promises to minority students without ever following through with them, she said.

"We realized that the proposals we were worried about were the same things black students were worried about in 1977 and 1967," said Mitchell.

On February 27, Mitchell sent a letter extending the deadline until March 11. However, when the deadline arrived, the BSA still had not received written responses from Kathlynn Ciompi, director of Undergraduate Admissions; Jacques Voegeli, dean of the College of Arts and Science; and Edward Parrish, acting dean of the Engineering School.

On March 11, the BSA sent statements to the national media and began their protest. They wore white armbands and hung a banner outside the Bishop Johnson Black

Cultural Center. The banner read, "The BSA protests Vanderbilt's inconsistent commitment to minority students."

The protest once again attracted national publicity on Vanderbilt's racial problems. "Reporters were all over campus," Mitchell said.

On March 18, one day before visiting black high school students arrived for Black Student Weekend, the BSA received the final letter of commitment from Dean Voegeli, and the protest ended.

After the BSA received all of the written commitments, the subject of racial discrimination at Vanderbilt left the headlines, but the BSA sent letters to the administration to ensure the issue would continue to be worked on over the summer, Mitchell said.

The BSA is trying to change the University "so that the students that are here after us won't have to experience the kind of things we did," said Mitchell. "The doors should be open to any person." □

ARCHAEOLOGY

Vanderbilt Students Dig Guatemala

By Rosalinda Mendez & Jim Myers

Sakirik, Don Arturo.

Sakirik. A utz a wach la?

Utz! Maltiox.

Such was the morning exchange, spoken in the Quiche (pronounced keechay, not the Lorraine variety) dialect of Maya, that greeted Arthur Demarest, Centennial Professor of Anthropology, at his most recent excavation on the Pacific coast of Guatemala. Due to a scarcity of available workmen in the region, people came from the highlands to work at the dig, and the language barrier (Quiche-Spanish, not Spanish-English) was just one of the logistical problems encountered in doing research abroad.

Professor Demarest has concentrated his work in Mesoamerica, exploring the pressing question concerning the rise of civilizations. He has worked in El Salvador and the Peten jungle of Guatemala investigating the oldest indigenous culture of the region. The Mar Azul Project, named after the shrimp farm on which the site is located, was started in order to investigate the first vestiges of society, the Ocos, dating back to 1500 B.C. (in eastern Mesoamerica). Led by Dr. Demarest on his eleventh expedition to the area, the project gave both Vanderbilt graduate students Paul Amaroli, Jim Myers, and Mary Pye and undergraduates Nancy Edens, David Hatfield, and Rosalinda Mendez the opportunity to excavate the most important site of its period in Guatemala.

The classic Maya civilization has been the subject of much study and interest in Central America. But two thousand years before the Maya civilization, the first complex societies of the region arose in the mangrove swamps along the Pacific coast. The site in which the team excavated covers the beginning of village culture to the rise of civilization in 800 B.C. It is also the first site found to contain artifacts and remnants from the beginning of the community structure to the start of civilization. The difference in time between the Ocos' culture and the later Classic Maya civilization is greater than the time separating the Maya and ourselves. The project was begun in late February '87 and continued until mid-June when the winter rains made further excavation impossible in this swampy region.

The Social Science Research Council, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and Vanderbilt University funded the project, allowing for the first time a team of American students to excavate the area. □

SPOTS

Off Campus

By Bob Tung

When one speaks of college, two immediate associations come to mind: alcohol consumption and academics. Vanderbilt, unfortunately, washed one of its highlights down the drain when common alcohol containers were banned in 1985. Students still receive an excellent education, but those students well-rounded enough to enjoy the other facets of life must now turn to the city of Nashville to satiate their extracurricular compulsions. Fortunately for them, Nashville is a growing, vibrant metropolis as well as the music capital of the world. The average student has easy access to everything from a relaxing Dos Equis and a fajita under the sun at San Antonio Taco Co. to witnessing electrifying performers like Bob Seger, Jimmy Hall, and Kenny Greenburg on stage together.

The second place referred to is Exit/In located one block north of Carmichael Towers on Church Street among several other bars, and is one of the most popular attractions for the Vanderbilt scene. Exit/In's nightly attractions range from college bands such as the Rhythm Pigeons and Shades of Black, to Nashville favorites such as John Jackson, the White Animals, Jimmy Hall and the Prisoners of Love, to such well-known bands as NRBQ, REM, the Doors, and Jimi Hendrix and his Band of Gypsies. The bar service can become a little difficult at times for the 400 or so people who pack the place, but there are usually three bartenders on busy nights to speed up the process. The crowd varies significantly in size and cleanliness depending on the performers. One is likely to find anything from hillbillies to punk rock slam dancers on any given night. One is sure to find a strong Vanderbilt following for the most popular university and local bands. It is impossible to get in at times if one arrives after 10 or 10:30 p.m. One must then revert to waiting in line or to conning the doorman. Every Tuesday from 7 to 10 p.m. Exit/In features Drink-or-Drown, in which one tests his bladder on an unlimited bar with a $5 cover charge.

A likely place to go before traveling to

Hot Spots

Exit/In is San Antonio Taco Co., located across from the Jean and Alexander Heard Library on 21st Avenue South. San Antonio's, with its predominantly college staff, is owned by two Vanderbilt graduates from Texas: Robin Delmer and Richard Patton. The partners recently expanded their operation when they opened a new San Antonio Taco Co. on 2nd Avenue South downtown. New to the menu this year is the addition of sangria and frozen or regular margaritas. The San Antonio's on 21st Avenue features a large front porch where you can bask in the sun while enjoying a bucket of their specialty Mexican beers, which you will likely need if you are eating their salsa-ized — you've gotta do it right — beef or chicken fajitas, or their chips with cheese dip. (If you really want to lose some hair, try their masochistic chicken wings). Notable decor trademarks of San Antonio's are their neon beer ads and the other mesmerizing neon signs lining the inside walls.

If you are not in the mood for Mexican food, you might try the romantic atmosphere of Faison's, where you will find great seafood specialties and American nouvelle cuisine. Located on Belcourt Avenue off 21st Avenue South, Faison's presents an enclosed split level brick patio crowned with a cascading botanical fountain. On the far wall is the entrance to the other half of the restaurant and to a double sided bar, where one finds either Will or Brian, two of the nicest and most engaging bartenders in town. A prime time to visit Faison's is for Sunday brunch, where one orders from their full menu and is treated to unlimited champagne. Faison's is owned by Vanderbilt graduate Jody Faison who directs most of his business toward the student body.

Jody owns another hot spot in town called 12th and Porter, ideally located on the corner of 12th Avenue and Porter Street, catty-cornered from the intersection of Broadway and Interstate 40. Twelfth and Porter has quite a different atmosphere from Faison's. Once a favorite musical attraction for performing artists, its dark, hole-in-the-wall atmosphere has been transformed into a contemporary oyster bar and restaurant. Its innovative and cheerful atmosphere holds promise for the future.

For those who would rather mix their alcohol with a pool cue, three of the best places to go in town are Amber III, Gold Rush, and Amiee's. Amber III has an excellent combination of pool tables, a full bar, lunch and dinner menus, and a recently added back porch. It's easily found across from Compton's on West End Avenue. Amber III is a favorite spot for sorority parties as well as a fraternity hangout.

The mystic, soul-stirring atmosphere of Gold Rush has a more rugged effect than its counterparts. There are many patrons, in and out of town, who swear by it, including most of the musicians, and all those Nashvillians who have left the beaten path.

One has to see it for oneself, because there is nothing like it. For a hearty appetite, the Gold Rush's Mexican bean rolls are one of the best tasting and best priced meals in town. There are dinner tables and two bars downstairs, with another bar and three pool tables upstairs. It is definitely a great place to start the night or cap it off. One always finds it booming when the rest of the town is asleep, with the majority of the crowd packing in around midnight and refusing to leave after three-thirty when the place closes.

If one is looking strictly for a no-frills pool hall, Aimee's is the place. Housing five pool tables, Aimee's is where many of the best local players fraternize. Aimee's sells beer in quart bottles, which saves a little strain on one's legs. There one is likely to find someone to shoot with up to 4 a.m.

As for other bars, Tavern on the Row is certainly a favorite for many Vanderbilt students and locals alike. With a clean, crystalline atmosphere, Tavern on the Row hides on 16th Avenue South. It is a local Shangri-la — a walled courtyard filled with sparkling trees and all of the ambience of a Parisian Cafe — with a price tag to match. It's an especially ideal place to go before travelling next door to see someone perform at Music Row Showcase, where many rock and roll greats such as Albert Collins and Jeff Beck have demonstrated their musical eminence.

If you love the Blues, you can't miss the Kingsnakes, who perform every Monday night at the Bluebird Cafe located near McDonald's on Hillshoro Road.

Hot Spots

RIGHT: When exam blues begin, the weekend is just a short walk away at T.G.I. Friday's. BELOW: Thursday nights find many students at Spat's happy hour.

It's a small place, so one is recommended to arrive early in order to secure a table. If not, one is likely to end up fighting for standing room in the back. Be prepared for some blazing-hot blues licks from lead guitarist Kenny Greenburg, who is certainly one of the best players in town. He feeds his emotions through his instrument, and one will never see a live noncopulating stage performer do more bad antics with a whammy bar, his guitar's neck, and the back of his head. It's certainly worth the $2 cover charge.

For those students who don't want to venture into Nashville culture, there's always favorite eating establishments such as Appleby's, Dalt's, Friday's, Spat's, or the West End Cooker. Each restaurant offers a unique assortment of truly American dishes including chicken fingers, buffalo wings, hamburgers, and various salads. Of course all of these restaurants boast a full bar and specialty drinks. Make sure you check each establishment for happy hour times.

Those with limited transportation should not feel completely left out. One of the best parts of the weekend begins as early as Friday morning in Sarratt's Overcup Oak Pub. The crowd varies proportionally with the quality of the weather, and sunny Fridays become quite crowded with $.75 drafts.

Jim's Place, located in the western perimeter of campus next to the stadium, is also a very popular place to drink brews. They often have acoustic performers such as Tall Paul, and like the Overcup Oak, one is bound to recognize some familiar faces.

Whatever his preference, the Vanderbilt student has an entire spectrum of food, beverages, and entertainment to choose from, a spectrum far too wide to encompass in one article. All one has to do is choose. If one can't decide, or just doesn't feel up to paying for overpriced drinks or cover charges, a six pack of Schaefer's is still only $2.48 at the nearest Hot Stop or Delta market. □ the classroom. Weddington stated that for young adults to make mature decisions, young adults need to be informed. On the other hand, Schlafly argued that informing children about sex and contraceptives encourages promiscuity at an immature age. On the matter of SDI, the two again had opposing views. Weddington stated that SDI was not technically feasible, while Schlafly supported the project.

Good Things Come to Those Who Wait

By Toby Carrig

Consistency and Tradition — All football programs seek them. Few ever reach that point.

At Vanderbilt, the football program has its own tradition in recent years — a losing one. The Commodores did not post a winning record in their last four seasons, and 1986 was one of the most difficult they had.

Vanderbilt welcomed a new coach, former Commodore quarterback Watson Brown, in grand style. However, Vanderbilt's opponents were not so friendly to Mr. Brown. They injured his quarterbacks and his star running back; they also had the audacity to find large holes in his defense.

This did make for a consistent season in 1986. The Commodores consistently turned the ball over, consistently gave up many points, and consistently lost. And it's the losses that upheld the Vanderbilt football tradition.

There has been just one winning season in the past decade and only four in the last 26 years. The 1986 season was the fourth since 1979 that the Commodores claimed the SEC cellar with an 0-6 record. When the '86 Commodores handed in a 1-10 worksheet, it was the seventh season since 1976 that the Vanderbilt football team won no more than two games. That's the type of tradition Brown would like to change.

Recently, the Commodores' losing tradition was upheld with a very consistent effort. There was no roller-coaster like trend of losing-winning-losing-tying-losing-winning-losing that has been witnessed in the past. There wasn't even a 4-0 start to be followed by a 1-6 collapse.

No, 1986 was the year of pure losing. Sure, there was a point when the Commodores pushed their record to 1-3 with a win over Duke, but Vanderbilt followed it with seven straight losses to insure the losing tradition. From the opening kick-off against Alabama to the final tackle against Tennessee, Vanderbilt's coaches, players and fans hopelessly sought a way to reverse the trend. It will take time.

Brown is hoping to make the wait short-ter by playing a lot of people, a move which could pay off in the long run. Brown was left with little choice as he watched quarterback Mark Wracher's career cut short by an injury. Wracher was just one of the three quarterbacks that played musical chairs on the depth chart. Tim Richardson was the "air apparent" when Wracher went down with injury, but transfer Eric Jones moved in behind center after a short stint at tight end. The Commodores also played several running backs because of an injury to senior Carl Woods, who still managed to close out his career less than 200 yards from the Vandy career rushing mark.

The first-year coach also shuffled his defensive alignments all season long, giving the freshmen plenty of playing time. Still, the defense allowed 31.5 points per game and 409.9 yards per game, while the Vanderbilt offense could score just 17.5 points per. These statistics placed them last among SEC schools.

A national television audience, an opponent ranked No. 4 nationally, and Watson Brown's debut as the head coach at Vanderbilt built up a dramatic tension that ended when Alabama's Gene Jelks raced through the line of scrimmage for a 72-yard touch-

While consistency is the key to success, the 1986 Vanderbilt Commodores found that consistency can also be negative. Even in the Commodore's only win of the season, an additional error could have produced a winless season.

While the Commodores certainly made more than their share of mistakes in '86, they also did a number of things right. Maryland quarterback Dan Henning passed the Terps into a 21-3 halftime lead. The junior quarterback who had taken few snaps previous to this season completed 23 of 31 passes for 315 yards against the Vanderbilt defense.

The Commodores, fighting to 21-13, did not give up in the second half, but the Terps made another run to put the game out of reach. Brown ignited the revolving quarterback situation by playing sophomore Tim Richardson, who scrambled into the end zone from 31 yards out to close scoring.

Once again, the national spotlight was on Vanderbilt Coach Watson Brown. This time, he was coaching against his brother Mack, who was in charge of the Tulane Green Wave.

Neither team had won a game yet in 1986, so this game was crucial to each Brown's season. Watson and Vanderbilt were the favorites, but the Commodores would take another on the chin.

The Green Wave's offense rolled all over Vanderbilt, with two rushers going over the century mark, and star quarterback Terrence Jones gaining 162 yards in total offense.

Again, the Commodore offense missed opportunities and turned the ball over seven times. Five of those turnovers were interceptions against quarterbacks Mark Wracher (four) and Tim Richardson (one).

While Woods rushed for 81 yards, Wracher's 265 yards passing were not enough to keep him in the starter's role. Brown announced that Tim Richardson, who rushed for another touchdown, would start against Duke.

down at the beginning of the second half.

The Commodores stayed close to the Crimson Tide in the first half even though they missed a couple of scoring opportunities. The Tide led just 14-0 at the half, but Alabama controlled the second half.

Watson Brown, who has been known to pull an upset or two in his premieres, displayed an offense which could move the ball on the heralded Tide defense. Unfortunately, Alabama's offense did the same to Vanderbilt.

Alabama played without All-American linebacker Cornelius Bennett, and the Commodores' no-huddle offense with multiple sets pushed the Tide back early in the game. Senior quarterback Mark Wracher contributed with 290 yards in passing while Carl Woods rushed for 92 yards. However, Tide talent proved too much as Jelks provided the killing blow.

Maryland, another nationally-ranked team, confronted the Commodores in game No. 2. It was a ranking that the Terrapins would lose later in the season, but their performance here seemed to indicate otherwise.

The score was 17-15, Vanderbilt. Seven minutes remained. The Commodores had the ball at their own 30-yard line, after the Blue Devils had just tacked three more points on to their nine unanswered points. Trouble was brewing for the 0-3 Commodores, and there was just one way to stop it.

Fullback Carl Woods took the hand-off on the Commodores' first play and scampered 70 yards into the Duke end zone. Vanderbilt went ahead 24-15 on Alan Herline's conversion kick and held off a Duke rally to cop its first, and only, win.

For the game, Woods finished with 112 yards, putting him within 370 yards of the school record. Quarterback Tim Richard son, in his first start of the season, completed nine of 22 passes for 189 yards.

The Blue Devils led the Commodores in yards, first downs, take aways and time of possession. However, the 'Dore defense would not let the Blue Devils get in the end zone, forcing them to make four field goals.

Vanderbilt's Ace Through the Hole

By Toby Carrig

When Carl Woods joined the Vanderbilt football team in 1983, a year after the Commodores won eight regular season games and played in the Hall of Fame Bowl, there was a mutual feeling that great things would occur.

In Woods' second game as a Commodore, he ran for 99 yards as the Dores nipped Iowa State 29-26. Perhaps when that first one-hundred yard game eluded Woods by a single yard, it was an indication of what was yet to come.

In the following four years, Woods would provide an interesting puzzle for Vanderbilt fans. Just as the Commodores could beat mighty Alabama one week and lose to Tulane the next, Woods would run forever one week and be stopped cold the next. Of course, this was not always Woods' fault. In his first three years at Vanderbilt, when he played behind offensive linemen like Will Wolford and Rob Monaco, Woods rushed for more than 600 yards each season. As a senior, with Wolford and Monaco graduated into the National Football League, Woods' rushing fell off to 552 yards.

The greatest tribute to Woods is that he gained 2,499 yards in a four-year span for a school whose offense is noted for the pass. He finished his career just 133 yards away from the Vanderbilt career rushing yardage record, and stands alone in second place. Perhaps the only reason that Frank Mordica's record eluded Woods was constant injury.

There were times in his junior season that Woods played when injured, and would still excel. There were times in his senior season when Woods couldn't play any more because the injuries were too great.

But it was Carl Woods' moments of greatness that gave the Commodore fans hope for brighter days. There would be two more games in Woods' freshman season when he would not only threaten the century mark in rushing, but he would break it.

In his sophomore season, he ran for 115 yards to spark the then 3-0 Commodores past the Crimson Tide of Alabama in Tuscaloosa. Woods capped off his junior year by rushing through Tennessee's Big Orange defense for 127 yards, despite a separated shoulder sustained in the previous game.

The most intriguing moments came during his final season as a Commodore. The Commodores started the season with three losses, and Duke was threatening to hand them a fourth. The Blue Devils ruled the second half until Carl Woods found daylight and roamed 70 yards for the clinching Vanderbilt touchdown in a 24-18 win. Woods' 112-yard performance against the Devils put him in second place on the VU rushing chart, just 370 yards away from the record with seven games to play in the season. But before Woods could get started on his chase, he was injured in the next game, against Auburn.

He would finish his senior season with strong outings against Virginia Tech and Tennessee, but as coach Watson Brown would say, he was never the same Carl Woods after the injury. Nonetheless, he was chosen as the starting fullback for the South squad in the Blue-Gray All-Star Classic. Finally, he was recognized for four years of perseverance in the Vanderbilt football program.

It's a short ride from Gallatin to Nashville. At Gallatin High School, Woods was a consensus all-star in his senior season. He finished a three-year career at Gallatin with 3,958 total yards and 46 touchdowns. There was no doubt that the Mid-Stater would help Vanderbilt stay in the upper echelon of the college football world.

In Woods' first year at Vanderbilt, the Commodores fell from an 8-4 record to 2-9. Aside from leading the Dores to victory over Iowa State, Woods galloped for 125 yards in a 30-17 win over Tulane. He finished the season with 644 yards, averaging 4.0 yards per carry.

In his second season, Woods bettered his seasonal rushing mark by 44 yards, despite the presence of Vanderbilt's All-Southeastern Conference quarterback Kurt Page. Woods was a runner in a passing offense, but that never hampered his spirit as a team player. He admitted that in order for the Commodores to be competitive, they "would have to abandon the run for a couple of games."

The Commodores finished 1984 with a 5-6 mark, the best record that would be obtained in the Woods era.

Woods entered his junior year as the leader of the Vanderbilt offense, whether he liked it or not. Kurt Page had graduated, leaving the quarterback's job to Mark Wracher. Woods' leadership role was increased when Wracher, a senior, went down with an injury in the second game of the season. "Woods doesn't like the leadership role, but he's so talented that he's fallen into it," said then-Vanderbilt Coach George MacIntyre. Woods rushed for more than 150 yards in the next two games, including a 90-yard effort which came in a last-second loss against Iowa State.

The Commodores season was topsy-turvy in 1985: Woods was held under 100 yards for the first ten games of the year; there was speculation that MacIntyre would resign at the end of the season; and injuries forced the Commodores to use two freshman quarterbacks for most of the season. Vanderbilt followed strong performances with tough losses.

The Commodores fell to 3-6-1 after a loss to Virginia Tech. It was a loss in which Woods re-injured his shoulder. "We really felt confident that we could win [against Virginia Tech]," Woods said. "I thought we had pulled it all together." It was a loss that sealed the fate of MacIntyre. The only remaining game was with SEC champion Tennessee.

Woods shook off his shoulder injury, which was re-aggravated for the third time that season, and disregarded the rumors surrounding the coaching situation. "I've got to get ready for UT, and that's all I'm thinking about. It's out of our hands."

Woods was ready for UT, all right. He rushed for a career-high 127 yards, including a then-career-topping 65-yard burst. The effort placed Woods over the 600-yard mark for the third straight year with 615 total yards.

Still, the Commodores were shut out by Tennessee, 30-0. MacIntyre was replaced by former Rice coach Watson Brown less than a fortnight after the season finale.

The 1986 season was one full of hope and optimism. A new coach would find three experienced quarterbacks, a plethora of experienced receivers and two versatile running backs. The only thing missing was an offensive line. In order to offset that factor, many offensive sets were employed. Often, Woods would find himself as a fullback in a wishbone backfield, typically not the glamour position.

But it was these sets, including the wishbone, that got Woods off to one of his best starts ever.

The rushing record-hype was very evident because Woods had seven games to gain 370 yards, and he was running strong.

"The record is not that important," Woods said after the win over Duke. "I'm going to keep playing hard and try to help the team win."

After rushing for 60 yards against the tough Auburn defense, Woods severely sprained his ankle while blocking.

The remainder of his senior season would not compare to the stunning performance against Duke. Still, he finished the year averaging 5.1 yards per carry, more than one yard per carry better than his best season. And he finished his career with cautious optimism about a career in professional football. □

The Commodores came off their first victory in a situation very much like the beginning of the year. Brown and his boys would have another tough test, No. 7 Auburn, on national television.

Unlike Alabama, the Tigers decided to put away the Commodores early. On the opening drive, Brent Fullwood galloped 38 yards for a touchdown, and the Tigers scored another touchdown in the game's first 66 seconds when linebacker Kurt Crain recovered an errant pass in the end zone.

The Tigers rolled up a 31-3 halftime lead. Auburn would settle for a 31-9 win as the Commodores scored six unanswered points in the second half.

Once again, the Commodore defense would be victimized by an offensive star. Fullwood started his belated march for post-season honors with a 145-yard effort. Quarterback Jeff Burger also completed seven of 10 passes for 106 yards. However, the Vanderbilt players were pleased with their play in the second half and saw it as an indication of better things ahead.

Those better things never quite appeared on the horizon for the Commodores. The Georgia Bulldogs avenged a 13-13 tie of last year by snapping up the Commodores, 38-16.

"Georgia totally dominated the football game," said Brown. The Bulldogs, who led 3-0 after one quarter, bursted for 21 points in the second quarter.

Georgia's offensive fireworks were provided by Lars Tate, who rushed for 112 yards and three touchdowns, and James Jackson, who ran for 75 yards and passed for 133 more.

After the Bulldogs had built a sizeable

31-0 advantage, the Commodores scored 16 points against back-up Bulldogs in the fourth quarter. Commodore quarterback controversy arose once more, this time between Tim Richardson (13 of 27 for 182 yards) and Eric Jones, who rushed for a touchdown late in the game.

When Vanderbilt stepped onto its home turf to face Mississippi, it looked like a good ole Southern football scrap was in store.

It didn't take very long for J.R. Ambrose, the Rebels' speedy receiver, to run 94 yards for a touchdown on the opening kickoff; the Rebels went on to score a touchdown in every quarter to defeat the Commodores, 28-12.

In the second quarter, receiver Ricky Myers found himself wide open in broken coverage and waltzed in for a 27-yard touchdown reception. The Rebel passer, Mark Young, had one of his best outings as he threw for 195 yards over the Vanderbilt defense. After an amazing 57-yard hook-up with Ambrose for the third score, Young ran in the last touchdown from 10 yards out.

The Commodores played Eric Jones much of the game, and he rushed for 68 yards. However, Jones also threw three passes to Mississippi defensive back Don Rogers.

And despite the 1-6 mark, Jones was optimistic that the Commodores could rebound. "A 5-6 record would be respectable," he said after the game.

While unassisted tackles may appear more glamorous to the fan, it is the assisted tackles that usually get the job done. Few people thought that winless Memphis State could elude Vanderbilt's wrath. Nonetheless, the Tigers left their home in Memphis and bested the Commodores in Nashville, 22-21. The victory was the Tigers' first win of the year after seven losses. It was a shock for the Commodores.

Vanderbilt led 21-7 in the third quarter after junior running back Everett Crawford ran in his second touchdown. Running back Kenny Weatherspoon had run in the Commodores' first tally.

The Tigers clawed back to score the final 15 points of the game. A two-point conversion with four minutes remaining decided the outcome.

The Commodores had two come-back attempts, but turnovers stopped both of them. The last one was stopped near midfield, keeping VU kicker Alan Herline off the field, although Herline was still one of the stars for the Commodores. His six punts for a 53.3-yard average kept the Commodores in the game.

The Commodores had ideas of standing in the winner's circle once again when they travelled up to thoroughbred country.

At this time, Kentucky was trying to end a tailspin into the losing column. After a 3-0-1 start, the Cats promptly lost their next four matches. Vanderbilt just seemed like the perfect game to end this streak.

On a rainy day in Lexington, the Kentucky passing attack was grounded. This gave Vanderbilt an early edge, as the Commodores jumped out to a 6-0 lead. However, the Commodore passing attack was equally as ineffective because much of this early yardage was gained on the ground.

Yet whatever Vanderbilt pulled out of its bag of tricks, it was inferior to the Kentucky Ivy — running back Ivy Joe Hunter. Ivy Joe was the UK workhorse, who ran for 238 yards on thirty carries and scored four touchdowns.

"They just beat the fool out of us," said Brown, as his Vanderbilt team fell into the SEC cellar with an 0-5 mark.

Virginia Tech	29
Vanderbilt	21

It would be safe to say that Virginia Tech kicked the Commodores all over the field.

Actually, it was Chris Kinzer who kicked five field goals (three from forty yards or more) in the Hokies 29-21 win over Vanderbilt. The Hokies, who won the Peach Bowl one month later, scored just two touchdowns to Vanderbilt's three, but Kinzer's 17 points made the difference.

Tech outscored the Dorens in the first half, 16-3, with the final three points following a blocked Herline punt. The Hokies added six more points in the third quarter before holding back Vanderbilt's comeback attempt.

The Commodores scored the game's last two touchdowns. Jones' second and third touchdown passes of the game. He finished the day with four completions in nine attempts for 76 yards. Two of his TD tosses went to tight end Carl Parker while the other went to back-up tight end Steve Kosanovich. While Jones scored the points and started the game, both he and Richardson saw considerable action. "We have told them that they are both starters," Brown said after the game. "We just kept alternating both to see who had the hot hand." At this point in the season, VU needed any hand it could get.

Tennessee	35
Vanderbilt	20

Vanderbilt's chance to forget all the losing, and avoid a double-figure loss total, came in the final game of the season, against intrastate rival Tennessee.

UT passed its way to a 28-7 halftime advantage and into the Liberty Bowl with a 6-5 record. Volunteer quarterback Jeff Francis rolled up 176 yards passing in the first half, including touchdown passes of 38, 50 and 51 yards.

In the second half, the Commodores' tight ends Kosanovich and Parker each scored touchdowns. Vanderbilt missed the extra point on the last touchdown, leaving a 28-20 deficit.

While the missed conversion took some air out of the Commodore comeback, nothing hurt more than William Howard's four-yard run which capped a 65-yard drive. Howard finished with 161 yards rushing on 30 carries, becoming the ninth running back to prance for more than 100 yards against the Dore defense.

For Vanderbilt, Carl Woods led 13 seniors off the field of play for the last time. He rushed for 84 yards on 21 carries. Junior linebacker Chris Gaines led the way defensively with 15 tackles. He finished the season with more than 115 stops. Gaines and the non-graduating Commodores are hoping for a way to go out winners unlike the class of 1987 that finished four years of Vanderbilt football posting an 11-32-1 mark. □

PROFILE : Vanderbilt's Receivers

The Vanderbilt MPC

By Toby Carrig

If you think TNT is explosive, you should take a glance at Vanderbilt's MPC. No, it's not a product out of the University's many research labs, although some people might suspect that.

Actually, MPC was imported to Vanderbilt. Part of it came from Alabama, but most of it was smuggled into VU from Valdosta, Ga. When all three components were brought together in 1985, the result was pure dynamite. Although he received much less than a Nobel Prize for his work, former Vanderbilt football coach George MacIntyre's discovery has sparked Commodore football fortunes for the late 1980's.

MPC is short for Magnificent Pass Catchers, and also stands for Mitchell, Parker and Crawford — Vanderbilt's three explosive receivers.

In the last two years, split end Gerald "Boo" Mitchell, tight end Carl Parker and running back Everett Crawford have combined to compile some impressive statistics and torture opposing defenses. Since 1985, MPC has caught 242 passes for 3,167 yards (an average of 13.1 yards per catch). The trio also was responsible for 12 touchdown receptions. And the best thing is that all three components will be in the Vanderbilt offensive line-up for 1987, while Mitchell will be a Commodore until 1988.

It is most certain that new head coach Watson Brown will attempt to utilize MPC as much as possible in the future. It may be the best weapon that Vanderbilt has against opponents, because while MPC has been hard to stop, the Commodores have had troubles in the victory column, holding a 4-17-1 mark in the last two years.

Actually, in 1986, all members of the Magnificent Pass Catchers saw their statistics fall off. It's probably no coincidence that the Commodores' number of victories fell from 1985, too. It's probably also very relative that MPC wasn't quite sure who would be the fuel for its fire since the Vanderbilt quarterback situation was up in the air much of the year. Still, all members of MPC managed to remain in the upper echelon of SEC receivers.

Crawford, a native of Huntsville, Ala., is the top receiver for Vanderbilt. He has led the Commodores in receiving in each of the last two seasons, and also led the SEC in 1985 with 50 receptions. In 1986, LSU's Wendell Davis, an All-American, was the only player in the conference to catch more passes than Crawford's 40.

Previous to his senior season, Crawford has 108 total catches — good enough for seventh place on the all-time Commodore pass receiving chart. And when it comes to the Vanderbilt pass receiving charts, there aren't any slouches. With another season like the last two, Crawford will land in second place behind Keith Edwards' 200 career catches.

Before Crawford will even have an opportunity to settle down on the school's receiving charts, Gerald "Boo" Mitchell will be threatening to pass him as the No. 2 receiver. At the current pace for Mitchell, he would be second in receptions but first in total yardage. While Mitchell has 32 less catches than Crawford, he is the top receiver when it comes to yardage with 1,202 in two years. The record is only 2,275 yards.

Mitchell is a product of Lowndes County High School in Valdosta, Ga., the same high school which produced VU tight end Carl Parker. When Parker was a sophomore in high school and Mitchell was a freshman, the school won the Georgia state championships.

Parker and Mitchell seem to have a lot more in common than just hometowns. In 1985, they both caught 45 passes, good enough for fourth in the SEC. They followed that up with 31 catches each last season. But while Mitchell is the big yardage player at wide-out, Parker can boast something that neither Crawford or Mitchell can...yet. As a sophomore, Carl Parker was on the receiving end of an 82-yard scoring strike from John Gromos, the third-longest passing play in Vanderbilt history.

For the most part, Crawford has been the primary receiver, both of passes and of the headlines. After all, he supplements his 1,000-plus yard receiving totals with 1,000-plus yards in rushing. He has been named the Associated Press' Co-Back of the Week on two occasions, once during his freshman year. While his first season was marked with outstanding moments, it was Crawford's sophomore season that ensured his reputation as an offensive threat. Not only did he lead the Southeastern Conference in receptions, he also added more than 400 yards in rushing. His talents were showcased against Kentucky when he rushed for 113 yards and tallied 119 yards in receiving. Most of his receiving yardage was on a short pass that he turned into a 66-yard touchdown.

Last season Crawford shined again, nearing his sophomore season total of 533 yards receiving with 517, despite the Commodores losing quarterbacks Mark Wracher and Tim Richardson to injury and redshirting John Gromos, the top passer in 1985.

If any member of MPC is stealing headlines from Crawford, it would be Mitchell. Mitchell's freshman season was exceptional, with 45 catches for 739 yards (a 16.4 yard average per catch). Mitchell was hampered slightly by the sophomore jinx, dropping to 31 catches for 463 yards, but "Boo" remained on schedule to break the Commodores' career mark for receiving yardage. He was also one of the leaders in touchdown receptions, making three.

The explosiveness of Mitchell was evident in the second game of his career, against Kansas. In that game, Mitchell was responsible for 184 yards in receptions, the best mark posted in the SEC in 1985. Still, Mitchell has not been able to gain national attention. It's hard enough to be just one part of the Vanderbilt trio, but Mitchell has been overshadowed by other SEC receiving stars like LSU's Davis, Alabama's Al Bell and Tennessee's Tim McGee.

But the member of MPC that seems most overshadowed is Carl Parker, a former flanker who made the transition to tight end for 1986. After all, MPC used to have Popp, a tight end by the name of Jim Popp, who earned All-SEC honors for two consecutive years. But Parker earned his own All-SEC honors this year, after catching 31 passes for 422 yards (a 13.6 yard per catch average) and three touchdowns. Parker trebled Popp's career totals for touchdown receptions in one season. While Parker was not as threatening as or as relied on as Crawford, he was a vital receiver in the Commodore scheme for his sure-handedness.

If anybody is overshadowed by MPC, it would be the rest of the Commodore receiving corps, and there are some good ones in that bunch. Tom Fitz, Tony Pearcey and Steve Kosanovich lead a group of youngsters that assist the Vanderbilt tradition of good receivers.

However, it is the valuable MPC that will be the key to Commodore fortunes. Who knows what could happen if Watson Brown decides to unleash this product in heavy doses on the opposition? Vanderbilt just might win some major honors after all. □

Vanderbilt's receivers often amazed spectators after making seemingly impossible catches. Whether impossible or not, though, the receivers' abilities always brought delight to the crowd and, more importantly, to their teammates.

SEC Title Proves Program Moving Up

By Hollis Borders

The 1986 Lady Commodores began their second season as a varsity squad with a new attitude of optimism and dedication. Led by co-captains Dana Kanter, senior, and Liz Teague, junior, the team arrived on campus in mid-August to begin training for a competitive schedule that included such nationally ranked teams as North Carolina State, Cincinnati, and Dayton. Randy Johnson took over as full-time coach, and with the addition of a team trainer and more practice time, the program began to gain some recognition from the athletic department.

Fifteen women returned from last year's squad, making up what Coach Johnson called "a good building foundation." Although no formal recruiting was done, five talented freshmen joined the team, adding the youth needed for future years. Johnson hopes to recruit freshmen in the years to come. "Many of us came here and just ended up playing soccer," said Kanter. "In the future, prospective freshmen will think of Vanderbilt as a school to come to for soccer as well as academics."

The 4-11-1 record for the fall season

"does not reflect how well we played" according to Kanter. Indeed, seven of the eleven losses were to teams that went on to play in post-season tournaments. "We played well against good competition," Coach Johnson adds. This was particularly apparent in the team's showing against Cincinnati. In front of a crowd of 150 Cincinnati fans, the Lady Commodores held their opposition scoreless for fifty-five minutes of play before they allowed a goal.

Other high points of the season were the third place showing in the Berry Tournament, the 1-1 tie with Louisville, and the 3-0 victory over Tennessee Wesleyan. These games proved to the women that they were able to compete with teams on their level and come out ahead.

The women's soccer program at Vanderbilt is certainly on its way up. Improvement over the past two years, while not reflected in the team's record, is evident to inside observers. As the sport begins to gain the support and recognition it deserves, the results will be more visible and the record will show the improvement. □

Men's Soccer

Slow Start Hurts Season

By Mike Holmes

Vanderbilt's men's soccer team was blessed with an abundance of talent this year - more so than perhaps any team in recent history. There was John Howell, the senior forward who broke former Vanderbilt forward Max Picaggli's scoring record, Carson Allen, Vanderbilt's first scholarship player, Payne Lancaster, the scrappy midfielder who made things happen for the Commodores both on offense and on defense, and a host of talented freshmen, including Calvin Schmidt and Bruce Beam. But instead of posting a great record, the Commodores were only 6-11-4. So what happened?

First, head coach Randy Johnson put together Vanderbilt's toughest schedule ever. There were away games against Duke and North Carolina State, ranked Nos. 1 and 2 in the nation at season's end. There was another road contest with a superb Pitt squad. And there were home games scheduled against perennial powers Alabama A&M, Alabama-Huntsville, and Louisville. But the Commodores persevered, thanks to the leadership of the Commodores' "big three," Howell, Lancaster, and Allen, and superb performances off the bench by backup goaltender Paul Westfall and freshman Steve Kepler. The defense was led by sophomore midfielder Earle Davidson and junior midfielder Bret Moore.

Second, the Commodores got off to a slow start. After dropping a scrimmage to Davidson 3-2, Vanderbilt traveled to Raleigh, N.C. to face Duke and N.C. State on consecutive days. The result: two straight shutouts, 7-0 by N.C. State, and 6-0 by Duke. The Commodores then let three more games get away before they finally beat Tennessee for their first win of the season. "With all those losses you don't have much confidence," said Johnson. "If we had had a win in there, we might have played a little bit better."

Despite its poor record, Vanderbilt's season was not without its triumphs. Probably the best showing for Vanderbilt came in the Marshall Tournament, where the Commodores pulled out a 6-5 win over defending champion Marshall University before settling for a second-place overall finish with a 5-0 loss to a then-undefeated Pitt team. Season highlights also included a 3-0 home shutout of archrival Tennessee, back-to-back victories over Tennessee Tech and Sewanee, and a 2-1 win over Georgia State - the Commodores' first ever win against the Panthers.

"We were a good team this year," said Johnson. "And I think that we're just a little bit away from being a very good team." With all but two starters returning, and players like Allen, Lancaster, Davidson and Moore returning, as well as goaltenders Westfall and Geoff Jones, next season just might be the year that the Commodores live up to their potential. □

Two reasons for the solid play at both the midfield and forward positions in 1986 was due to the outstanding performances by sophomore Payne Lancaster (near right) and by junior Carson Allen (far right). These two tied for third place in terms of goals scored this season (4), as well as also tying for the team lead in assists (5).

PROFILE: John Howell

A Career to be Remembered

By Mike Holmes

A large part of the Vanderbilt soccer offense this year could be attributed to a single man. With his explosive quickness, and uncanny ability to confuse would-be defenders, John Howell eclipsed Max Picaggli's career scoring record, and led the Commodores past such highly-touted teams as Alabama-Huntsville, Georgia State, and Sewanee. And all this came from a man who never played a minute of high school soccer.

In fact Howell, a senior economics major from St. Louis, nearly pursued a career on the gridiron instead of the soccer field. "At first (in high school) everything worked out great," he said. "Football was in the fall and soccer was in the spring. But then they moved soccer to the fall as well. By that time, I had earned a starting spot on the football team (he was a wide receiver/safety), which was a big honor, and too much to give up." So he hung up his soccer cleats - until he came to Vanderbilt.

"When I came to Vanderbilt I had to make a choice," he recalled. "I had to be willing to put the time into football and maybe not play, or go out for soccer, where I felt I could make the team, and not take up all my time."

So John Howell headed for Purdy field looking for a spot on a soccer team that was headed for a 12-8 season. To everyone's surprise, he not only made the team, but cracked the starting lineup early in the season. "I remember in my first game I was nervous," he said. "I didn't know if I'd really fit in." But fit in he did, and when the season was all over, Howell had found the net 12 times and put together one of the finest freshman seasons in recent memory.

Howell's sophomore season saw the arrival of many of the Commodores' present stars, including Carson Allen, the Commodores' first scholarship player, Kevin Houley and Jim Wood, the 1986 co-captains, as well as Bret Moore and John Louis. Playing alongside his new teammates, Howell again excelled, as the Commodores put together an 11-10 season against a much tougher schedule than had ever been put together before.

The 1985 campaign solidified Howell's place next to Vanderbilt's soccer superstars, as he led the Commodores to a 12-8 record by scoring 11 goals and recording a team-leading five assists. His 28 total points were tops on the team, as were his four game-winning shots. His finest performance came in Vanderbilt's 3-0 shutout of Memphis State, when he scored all of the Commodores' goals.

Howell would have liked nothing better than to see Vanderbilt's success continue into the 1986 season, but alas, the schedule was not to comply. The Commodores started the season with back-to-back losses to North Carolina State and Duke, and six games passed before Vanderbilt recorded its first win. Despite the team's 6-11-4 record, Howell did manage to eclipse Picaggli's all-time scoring and total points record, and tally two goals in the Commodores' 3-0 win over Tennessee. But the most memorable moment of the season for Howell came on the astroturf of Dudley Field on the night of November fifth - his last home game.

"I really wanted to perform as well as I could," he recalled. "I wanted everyone there to know that I was hustling and playing as hard as I could. I wanted everyone to know that I was giving 100 percent." But when the final whistle blew, Alabama A&M had won, and Howell hadn't scored. But that didn't make the experience any less memorable for Howell.

"I guarantee you, I'll never forget the final whistle of my final home game," he said. "When that final whistle blew, I just looked at everything around me, and as I was walking off the field, I thought 'My God, it's over. I'll never see this place again.'"

Although Howell's soccer career is over, he holds high hopes for the future. "The program will continue to improve," he predicted. "We're only losing two guys (Howell and back David Lang), and I think that the team will go back to having a winning record even with a tougher schedule. They'll also have some good leaders in Houley and Allen."

And Howell doesn't plan to forget the team he labored for for four years. "I'm planning to put something back into the program later," he said. "I don't know what it will be yet, but the team needs assistants, and money wouldn't hurt either - all but three of the teams we play give major scholarships." However, Howell can no longer help where he'll be missed most - on the soccer field. □

Senior John Howell (left) had a dazzling final season in the Vanderbilt black and gold, but his success would have been limited without help from the midfield and back lines. Midfielder Payne Lancaster (below right) assisted Howell on three goals, while back player John Louis assisted once (his only assist).

Fielding Errors Sink 'Dores

By Tony Neely

Summarizing the 1987 Vanderbilt baseball season is simply a case of finding The Good, The Bad, and The Ugly.

The Good came in the early part of the season in February and March. Sailing swiftly on a gust of high expectations, Vanderbilt won its first nine games and blew through March with a 17-6 record. Even more important, the Commodores had played well in the Southeastern Conference. The team was in fourth place with a 5-4 record, putting Vanderbilt in contention for one of the six berths available in the SEC post-season tournament.

Highlights of the early success included winning two out of three games from both Mississippi and Mississippi State and a 27-4 pasting of non-conference foe Samford. Vanderbilt tied or broke six school records against Samford. David Joiner led the way with a school-record nine RBI and his three home runs tied another school mark.

Life looked rosy on McGugin Field as March gave way to April. Vanderbilt was batting .335 as a team and was scoring runs and hitting homers at a record pace. The number one starting pitcher, Kyle Balch, won his first five decisions. Ace reliever Scott Graf was 3-0 with three saves. And the fielding, Vanderbilt's nemesis in the previous season, was at a steady .953 clip. Head coach Roy Mewbourne had his crew sailing in the right direction. But ominous storm clouds were gathering.

The Bad began, ironically, on April Fool's Day as the Commodores dropped a doubleheader at Evansville. The double defeat started a tailspin which saw the team lose 19 of its last 29 games, including 18 of 20 SEC matchups. Once the ship started taking on water, the skipper and his crew just weren't able to bail fast enough to get it righted again.

The Ugly parts were revealed during the losing skid. Most of them centered on the defense and the pitching, which had both appeared to be much improved during March. Appearances, however, proved deceiving.

Vanderbilt ended the season with 117 errors and a fielding percentage of .937. As the errors piled up, so did the strain on the pitching staff. Vanderbilt allowed more earned runs this season than any other in school history and the team ERA was a disappointing 5.74.

The Commodores sagged to ninth place in the SEC with a 7-20 record. On the bright side, though, Vanderbilt did salvage a winning season by finishing with a 27-25 overall record.

In addition to the winning season, more bright spots included the sparkling play of several individuals.

Most notable was the hitting of junior first baseman Greg Smith, whose .411 batting average was the best single season mark in school history. He also led the team with 52 runs scored and 52 RBI. Smith's great season was rewarded with first team All-Southeastern Conference honors and he was also named third team All-American. (See pages 202-203 for the feature on him in this section.)

The 1987 Vanderbilt team was also noted for its for its great power hitting. The Commodores pounded 76 home runs. Junior catcher Cam Hazen and senior second baseman Brad Harvie led the way with 14 each. Smith hit 13, junior shortstop David Joiner hit 12, and junior designated hitter Archie Smith added 10. Harvie led the way in game-winning hits with six.

Six Commodores batted at least .300, including Greg Smith (.411), Hazen (.341), Harvie (.327), freshman catcher Mark Kruchten (.310), Joiner (.306), and Archie Smith (.300).

It was, once again, an up and down year on the diamond. After a tremendous start, the 'Dores began to slump due to excessive fielding errors. By the end of the season, 117 errors had been committed. Yet the bats stayed hot. RIGHT: Catcher Cam Hazen, who ended the year with a .341 batting average, lets a "close one" go by. In fact, it was a little too close for comfort. BELOW: Even baseball photographers can get "artsy" once in a while. The shot is self-explanatory.

More key contributors to the offensive fireworks were freshman leftfielder Jim Schifman (.296), senior rightfielder Vance Schulte (.293), senior third baseman Joey Jackson (.275), sophomore outfielder Bob Schabes (.275), and freshman centerfielder Mike Skaggs (.220).

Members of the pitching staff also had their moments of glory. Junior Kyle Balch led the team with seven wins, including complete game victories over Georgia, which eventually advanced to the College World Series, and Mississippi. Senior relief pitcher Scott Graf set a school record by appearing in 25 games. He posted a 4-2 record, notched three saves, and tossed a four-hit shutout of Western Kentucky in one of his rare starting roles.

Junior Archie Smith proved to be extremely versatile. In addition to his already mentioned hitting exploits, he was outstanding in center field and was also used extensively as a pitcher. Smith pitched in 22 games, had a 4-6 record, and led the team in ERA (4.38), innings pitched (78), strikeouts (89), and saves (four).

Other pitchers who played key roles included sophomore Jim Heins (5-2 record), junior Bobby Scoggins (3-0), freshman Tim Smith (2-1), and sophomore Bud Adams, who struggled with the burden of numerous unearned runs en route to a 2-7 record.

Looking toward 1988, Vanderbilt will be missing the services of four seniors--Scott Graf, Brad Harvie, Joey Jackson, and Vance Schulte, all of whom have graduated or will be graduating in the current school year. Three underclassmen were also drafted and signed in the major league baseball draft--Bud Adams, David Joiner, and Archie Smith--giving the coaching staff numerous holes to fill in 1988.

And hopefully there will be more of The Good, and less of The Bad and The Ugly that Vanderbilt saw during its 27-25 season of 1987. □

PROFILE : Greg Smith

From Kid Gloves to Baseball Mitts

By Tony Neely

Four-year old Greg Smith tightly clutched a small plastic bat and peered intently at his father.

Don Smith held a wadded-up sock and tossed it gently toward his son. With a mighty roundhouse swing, sock met plastic. The erstwhile ball wobbled across the yard. Little Greg swiftly circled an imaginary diamond, short legs pumping like pistons, before sliding into a home plate only a four-year old could see.

"Home run!" the boy squealed with glee. His father smiled.

In such a scene, the boy's love of a game began.

Seventeen years have passed. The love affair has deepened. Greg Smith is now the first baseman for Vanderbilt University. He is a very good player, having set a school record last season as a junior with a .411 batting average. Most of his educational expenses are paid in return for his services. Yet, to know Greg Smith is to know he plays not for the money, but for the love of the game.

"I thrive on the game. I never get tired of it," Greg says when asked to explain his passion for the sport. "I don't know why I'm like this. It's just something inside of me."

It is not Greg's fault that he is unable to isolate the beginnings of his thirst for baseball. His memory doesn't stretch back to birth, almost the time he began playing around the game.

"I used to coach in high school and I would take Greg with me," Don Smith says. "He was always around the game and my players would play with him, toss him the ball. He showed an immediate interest and it developed from there."

"I didn't force him to play (when he was young)," the elder Smith says. "He got dedicated to playing and it grew and grew. The older he got the more he realized he had to work. He's always had the love for the game and the willingness to work."

The willingness continues today. Greg arranges his classes in the mornings so that he can come as soon as possible to McGugin Center. Greg will work out in the weight room, hit in the batting cage with other early arrivals, or, if no one is available, hit off a tee into a net. Greg sees nothing unusual in that routine.

"I love going out there to practice every day," he says. "The key for a baseball player is developing good work habits. A lot of coaches say you have to make sacrifices, but I don't consider it (extra work) to be a sacrifice. It doesn't seem like work to me."

Greg's father would agree.

"When we would go on vacation the other kids would want to go fishing or swimming or down to the beach. Greg would want to play catch or try to find a field for some batting practice."

Again, the young man is no different from the youngster. This past December, the Smith family drove to St. Augustine, Fla., to spend Christmas with Greg's grand-parents. Greg promptly recruited his father and two junior college players who lived nearby for some daily batting practice at Flagler College.

"We hit every day for a week and a half, about 200 cuts a day," Greg says. "Because of exams I had been away from hitting for a couple of weeks. I wanted to get my timing back and get a head start on hitting."

The early work paid off handsomely. Greg enjoyed a fabulous 1987 season which included:

- A .411 batting average, the highest single season average in school history and a mark which led the Southeastern Conference in hitting;
- 83 hits, another school record;
- 54 singles, tying a school record;
- leading the team in games played (52), games started (52), at-bats (202), runs (52), hits (83), runs batted in (52), singles (54), doubles (16), and on-base percentage (.467);
- first team All-Southeastern Conference honors; and
- third team All-American honors, only the fourth Commodore to achieve All-American distinction.

Of all the feats, perhaps the .411 batting average is what stands out most. Greg is only the fourth Commodore to achieve the .400 plateau.

"I felt like that (batting .400) was a good goal for me, reachable but quite a challenge," says Greg, who had batted .356 during his 1986 sophomore season. "The mental game of hitting .400 is tough. You have to go 2-for-5 every day or see your average go down. I was fortunate to stay above it (.400)."

"This season was the culmination of a few things. I had learned a lot about myself as a hitter...my strengths as well as my weaknesses. Once you've been in the league a couple of years you know how guys want to pitch you. (Batting) Coach (George) Weicker always talks about having a plan and knowing the pitchers helps me go to the plate with a plan."

"And, I had some good fortune," Greg continues. "To have a big year you have to get some 'cheapies' (cheap hits) here and there. I had a few drop in that shouldn't have. Next year I might hit it harder and not have the numbers to show for it because of the way the game is."

The post-season honors were simply icing on the cake.

"Making third team All-American was something I never expected," he says. "That was a complete surprise. That put me in some pretty good company. I have worked out and played with Scotti Madison and Joey Cora (two previous VU All-Americans) so it was quite an honor to achieve something they had."

The only fly in the ointment came last summer when Greg was not selected in the major league draft of college and high school players. Greg had hoped to be drafted but he took the news philosophically.

"I believe everything happens for a purpose, for a reason. Sometime down the road I'll look back at this and see it as a blessing. That may not be what I wanted at the time but I think everything will work out for the best. Not getting drafted made my decision about signing or returning to school easier," says Greg, who is on track to graduate on time this spring with a degree in sociology.

"I've always said and believed that baseball doesn't owe anybody anything. I still want to get drafted and play pro ball but this helped me put things in better perspective. It's just a game and you have to let it be that."

Twenty-one year old Greg Smith firmly clutched an aluminum bat and peered intently at his father. Don Smith held a baseball and threw it toward his son. With a smooth, polished swing, ball met metal. The baseball arched majestically into the blue Florida sky, becoming smaller and smaller, until landing behind the fence at Flagler College Field.

"Home run!" the boy said with a laugh. His father smiled. □

Scenes From the Dugout

Traditionally, the baseball dugout has been the place for the players to gather together when not out on the diamond. Because of this use, many different things can occur. One favorite dugout pastime is the heckling of the opponents who are in earshot. The dugout is also used as a place for watching other players warm up (right). It is also used as a greeting area when the players have a successful outing on the diamond. For example, junior Brad Harvie gets congratulated for hitting a home run (top right). However, it can also be a place to observe your team's poor performance (far right).

Men's Rugby

A Young Team Gains Experience

By David Scott

While wandering through the weight-room this past semester, I noticed a large, twenty-six year old fellow bench-pressing three hundred or so pounds without much effort. He donned a Dallas Harlequins Rugby team t-shirt as well as a very black and blue eye, a squeaky knee, and a puffy scar that ran from the top of his neck to the middle of his gut.

He seemed extremely proud of his appearance, especially his enormous scar, because of the air of confidence that radiated from his body. When I got up enough courage to ask him about his lacerations, he was more than willing to talk.

He referred to each wound as "Oh, this thing?" and said that all had occurred during his participation in The Game. The black eye resulted from an errant fist in a scrum, the knee had no cartilage left from surgery, and the scar was incurred during a post game party when he and his rugby buddies were playing Errol Flynn with broken beer bottles. I can't imagine why. You figure it out.

Yet, even with all of his bodily scrapes, he had nothing but reverence for the sport.

The funny thing is that all of his injuries occurred during his eight games of playing...hooker. For those of you who are unfamiliar with the job of the hooker, he is the middleman of the front line of the eight-man scrum formation, who is sandwiched between two 250-300 pound fellows (the props). The two opposing scrum packs push against each other in an attempt to push the other away from the ball that is thrown in the middle of the pack. One might say that it's a compacted "push-of-war."

When the ball is tossed into the scrum, the hooker must snag or "hook" the ball when it's loose on the ground (fighting the opposing hooker for the possession of the ball) and pass it back (using only his feet) through the eight man clumping. He does not really push that much, so it is rare for a hooker to experience the kind of pain that this fellow had experienced.

It is not uncommon, however, for the props to suffer neck injuries incurred in the scrums because they are the ones who receive most of the opposing team's force.

Since the hooker is not a high bodily risk position and he was in such a sad physical shape, I would have hated to have seen the Harlequin's props after a match.

Furthermore, this fellow said that he had never played rugby before his stint with the 'Quins, which seems to be an American trend in this newly imported English game.

Similar to this former Harlequin, Vanderbilt lived up to this American trend in the 1986-87 season because the squad lacked thirteen of fifteen starters from the previous year. In other words, the younger, more inexperienced players had to fill the void left by the graduates.

This inexperience accounts for many of the problems that the club had on the pitch this year. For example, after the fall season, the Commodores had experienced its third consecutive losing record over the past two years, which had been unthinkable three years earlier. After all, Vanderbilt had just won its second consecutive Southeastern Conference title in the sport.

The fall season began with back-to-back losses to the Atlanta Renegades and Middle Tennessee State, and a tie with Fort Campbell. The game with Atlanta was a close loss, 16-10, which showed that Vanderbilt could play competitive rugby. However, against M.T.S.U., the Commodores played as if they hadn't ever seen a rugby ball before.

They played sloppily and made many mental errors. "These problems can only be explained by our youth," said captain Will Stewart. "The mental mistakes will disappear later on in the season when our younger players get some experience."

Against Fort Campbell the following week, the 'Dores succeeded in tying the All Whites, 16-16.

When the Southeastern Conference tournament rolled around, Vanderbilt, uncharacteristically, was struggling with a winless record. The tournament did not help much because they finished in seventh place. They lost their opening match to Tennessee, 28-0, as well as their second match against Louisiana State, 22-10. However, the ruggers picked up a win when Auburn forfeited.

Then Vanderbilt went on a roll by defeating Dry Gulch in Nashville and following it up with a defeat of Vanderbilt's Alumni team, 16-6, on Homecoming weekend. This victory made up for the club's loss to the alumni the previous year.

However, these good feelings quickly fled the following week in Memphis because they were beaten by both the Memphis State and Memphis Old Number Seven teams, 18-4 and 32-0 respectively. Said Stewart, "I'm very frustrated because we played hard enough to win but the breaks just didn't go our way."

Against cross-the-street rival Nashville, the 'Dores were simply trampled into the mud, 30-0.

The final three games of the fall season were in the National Collegiate Rugby Championships, in which Vanderbilt played their best rugby of the season but dropped two of three matches. The first loss was to a tough Tennessee Tech squad, 7-3. Against Rhodes College, the 'Dores won a close battle, 6-0, and then advanced to the consolation match of the double elimination tournament. The ruggers played Memphis State for a second time that season but lost 12-0. Said Stewart, "We played the best rugby we had all season and we built a good base for the next semester."

In fact, Stewart was correct because Vanderbilt completed the spring season with a winning record, which broke their three-season slide into the losing column.

The opening match against M.T.S.U. ended in a tie, 10-10. Unfortunately, the ruggers had a 10-4 lead late in the game but they gave it up due to some missed tackles. However, this match did show that Vanderbilt had improved over Christmas Break.

The 'Dores lost their second match to Nashville but bounced back to defeat Memphis Old Number Seven, 12-0, and Memphis State, 32-8. After all, revenge is a great motivator.

The following weekend, Vanderbilt hosted the King's College touring side from Great Britain. Although the 'Dores led early, the Brits eventually took control by half-time and won handily, 30-3.

Against Fort Campbell, the ruggers, once again, tied, this time it was 9-9. However, in the season finale with Tennessee Tech, the 'Dores downed the Cookeville boys, 7-4.

So, all in all, the Vanderbilt rugby team had a successful year because: the new players gained valuable experience and playing time, and the squad avenged three fall season losses in the spring. □

Netters Falter in Second Half

By Scott William

It is the enemy that takes no prisoners; a disease that, this year, attacked only the varisty teams. It ran rampant through the baseball and basketball programs but graciously passed over the football team, which it had struck down in 1984.

Its symptoms are: a successful start at the beginning of a season, a banner victory against an opponent, and a tragic ending that causes a coaching staff to spend endless hours analyzing the question, "what happened?"

The disease is better known as Old Fashioned Bad Luck and its final victim this year was the 1987 Women's Tennis Team.

In the first five matches of the season, the Lady Netters played good, solid tennis, which was reflected in the win/loss column.

In these early matches, that featured four teams from other conferences and one Southeastern Conference team, Tennessee, Vanderbilt outscored their opponents 28-13 in terms of matches won. These results translated into victories over Austin Peay, Florida State, Tennessee, and Alabama-Birmingham (UAB).

The only loss all season to an out-of-conference team was William and Mary.

The Lady 'Dores were 4-1 after 5 matches and the top players were on a roll.

First seeded Kathryn Bumstead played outstanding tennis and downed all five of her singles opponents and went 3-1 in doubles when paired with Kelly Quku (doubles were not played against UAB).

Number two seeded Quku, riding in the wake of her strong groundstrokes, went 3-2 in singles.

Number three player Denise Stauffer, who lost her first two singles matches, turned her game around and swept through her last three opponents. She and Jennifer Harvey were undefeated in doubles. Furthermore, number four Harvey was 4-1 in singles.

Then the disease attacked.

In the final nine matches, eight of which were against the remaining SEC powerhouses, Vanderbilt could only manage to win one of them, this victory coming against the University of Jacksonville.

But what happened?

"We just didn't play well as a team," said women's coach Lou Weiss. "Kathryn [Bumstead] played well at times at singles, but we lost too many crucial matches as a unit, ones that could have gone either way with a little luck."

The Southeastern Conference, once again, was not kind to the Lady 'Dores. In fact, the Lady Netters won only one-third of the matches that their opponents did, 18-63, in their eight losses.

Furthermore, in these final eight SEC matches, the Lady Commodores won no more than three contests against an opponent. The Lady Netters were shut-out by both Florida and Kentucky; took one match each from Louisiana State, Georgia, and Alabama; won two matches each against Auburn and Mississippi State; and won three matches against Ole Miss.

"The SEC is just a tough conference," said Weiss. "It's difficult to recruit the new players because, here at Vanderbilt, they must commit not only to athletics, but also academics."

If there is any consolation in this season, it is the performances of the Lady 'Dores at the SEC Indoor Tournament in the fall because Vanderbilt players reached the semi-finals in both the singles and doubles competitions.

"It was just an up and down year," said Weiss. "We started out great by winning three matches and then went through a lapse period where we lost a lot of confidence in our ability to win. It seems to be a trend in Vanderbilt athletics."

Unfortunately, the Lady Netters had to say good-bye to coach Weiss who vacates his spot to the men's tennis coach, Bill Tym, so that he can run both programs.

Weiss leaves the women's team after five years and departs with a record of 43 wins and 61 losses. □

A New Coach Molds a New Dynasty

By Toby Carrig

For three years, the Vanderbilt Commodores watched the Southeastern Conference tennis season from the cellar, unable to chalk up one victory. But in 1987, the Commodores made up for all that by compiling three SEC victories on their way to an 18-12 season, their second winning season of the decade.

Vanderbilt's triumphant rise out of the SEC basement featured an accent on youth, including two newcomers that had banner seasons. One of those newcomers was the head coach, Bill Tym, who steered his team towards the three goals that he had set at the beginning of the season: a winning record, an SEC victory and a win over a nationally-ranked team.

Vanderbilt got not one, but three SEC wins by beating Mississippi State and Mississippi 5-4 and also knocking off the nation's No. 25 team, Auburn, 5-1.

The Commodores top singles player was also a Vanderbilt newcomer, freshman David Drew. From the No. 4 spot on the singles ladder, Drew compiled a 25-5 record including an 8-2 mark in conference play.

Also compiling 25 wins was sophomore Reid Rafter, who finished the season with a 25-7 record. Murray Garrott, who played in the top half of the Commodore line-up all season, was the only other singles player to achieve a winning record in ten or more matches by finishing at 17-15. Jeff Barry finished the season at 15-17, Fletcher Lance was 12-15, and senior Cliff Retief, the team's No. 1 singles player, completed a 12-20 season. Jeff Holzbeierlein was a winner in his only singles match while Cliff Norris was winless in six attempts.

All season, the Commodores' strength seemed to be in the doubles play. The team of Cliff Retief and David Drew finished a 21-6 season, while Lance and Rafter were 12-14 and Barry and Garrott teamed for a 12-15 mark.

Vanderbilt's winning season began slowly as Vanderbilt found itself 7-5 before embarking on SEC play. The Dorees were handed back-to-back losses by tennis powers Tennessee and Georgia to even their mark. Vanderbilt responded by winning four straight matches, including a 5-4 victory over Mississippi State. The win was the first match that the Commodores had played on their newly resurfaced outdoor courts.

The Vanderbilt win string was interrupted by a difficult 5-4 loss at Tennessee-Chattanooga, a former stop in Tym's coaching career. But Vanderbilt began another string, an impressive five-match winning streak which included 9-0 sweeps against Southern Illinois and Austin Peay and an 8-1 victory against Alabama-Birmingham.

While Vanderbilt closed out the season with three consecutive Southeastern Conference losses with nationally-competitive programs (including a heart-breaking 5-4 loss against Kentucky), the 'Dorees had triumphed over Mississippi and Auburn.

The 1987 tennis season saw the Commodores achieve the three primary goals that first-year coach Bill Tym had set for them. But the end of this success-ful season could mean the beginning of a successful era in Vanderbilt tennis. □

Cross Country

Keep Running Tough!

By Margaret Feuille and Genie Whitesell

The harriers began the fall 1986 cross country season with a bang. The season started simultaneously with the academic year and continued until Thanksgiving break. The team hosted one invitational and traveled all over the Southeast to compete in seven meets.

In cross country, the women run a five kilometer race, while men compete at eight kilometers. The harriers bound up hills, across streams, through wooded trails, and across rugged terrain, which requires extreme discipline, determination, and hard work. Therefore, the harriers must run 50-70 miles per week.

The transition from a five kilometer high school race to the highly competitive eight kilometer college race did not hinder the inexperienced men's team. The team, led by senior captain Bill Boyd, the only returning runner, showed improvement with each successive meet to finish the season quite strongly. The tightly knit men's squad consisted of juniors Mike Selmo and Hal Ford; sophomores Robert Alley and Victor Domen, and freshmen Elmore Holmes, Steve Mass, Bruce Case, Bill Allen, David Williams, and Daniel Williams.

The Lady Commodores were guided by three returning seniors: captain Margaret "the Hoot" Feuille, Jenny "Killer" Stanton, and Genie "Beanball" Whitesell and returning juniors Kettie "Scooter" Schoonover, Betsy "the Boozie" Usher, and Laura "Speed-machine" Vaughn. The team's efforts were strengthened by freshmen "Wild" Liz Slatten and Heather "the Heater" Turner.

The Lady Commodores were led through an exceptional season by Jenny Stanton and basketball player Nicole Marcelli, who helped the team to a strong beginning.

Vanderbilt, despite having the only non-scholarship team in the Southeastern Conference fared well. The women consistently performed well, despite set-backs due to injury and illness. The team's impressive victory at the Sewanee Invitational was the highlight of the women's season.

Coach Mark Webb completed his fourth season of coaching the Vanderbilt cross country team. However, this year he had the added advantage of having coaching assistants for both the men's and the women's teams. Margaret Groos-Thomas, who is ranked among the top five women runners in the nation, assisted with the women's team. Jack Mikel, a graduate student in mathematics and a former high school coach, aided Webb with the men's team.

Furthermore, with the addition of the spring track season, the women's team is now able to train year round. The addition of track will add depth and strength to the cross country team in the future. □

Whether it means jumping across streams (far left), bounding through the woods (lower left), or hastily running over level ground (below), the Vanderbilt cross country team finished an extremely successful season by finishing first in three meets, second in four meets, and third in one.

Tough Losses End Banner Season

By Buster Olney

It was a season of great accomplishment for the Lady Commodore basketball team, but...ultimately...it was a season that ended in great disappointment.

As the 1986-87 campaign wound down to its final month, Vanderbilt was 20-4, with wins over nationally-ranked Tennessee and Western Kentucky, and ranked 10th in the national polls.

And then the bottom simply dropped out.

Vanderbilt only won three of its final nine games, at one point losing three straight by the combined margin of 80 points.

Though the Lady Commodores earned their second consecutive NCAA bid, they again were beaten in a their first-round, succumbing to an underrated opponent, James Madison, 68-60.

"We expected them to roll over and die for us," said Lady 'Dore forward Patsy Smith, shaking her head.

The Vanderbilt performance was a far cry from the team that knocked off eventual national champion, Tennessee, earlier in the year, or the team that dismantled highly-touted Western Kentucky twice, or the team that blew out opponents by an average of 15 points a game until that final, deadly stretch.

"I think we finished higher than most people thought we were going to," said Vanderbilt coach Phil Lee, whose team graduated its top two scorers, Jackie Cowan and Donna Atkinson, from the year before.

But Lee conceded that he, personally, didn't necessarily feel that way.

Down the stretch, Vanderbilt suffered from some lackluster individual efforts and an almost non-existent perimeter game.

There were a number of bright spots, though perhaps overshadowed by the collapse at season's end.

Karen Booker, the team's only senior, was named to the All-Southeastern Conference team after averaging 19 points and 12 rebounds a game. It was an appropriate and overdue honor for Booker, who became Vanderbilt's all-time leading rebounder and the fifth 1,000 point scorer in Lady Commodore history.

Forward Carolyn Peck played extraordinarily well down the stretch despite a knee injury, serving notice that she may very well be the team's no. 1 offensive option next year.

Deborah Denton cruised through the early season as Vanderbilt's most explosive offensive player, using her driving moves and jump shots to average 15 points a game. Denton also led the SEC in steals, just ahead of Booker.

Patsy Smith was Vanderbilt's catalyst during the 1986-87 campaign. When she played well, so did the Lady Commodores. Smith, who finished with a 12 point scoring average and was the team's second leading rebounder, sparked the club in victories over Ole Miss in the SEC tournament and Tennessee during the regular season.

For the first time in his seven-year coaching stint at Vanderbilt, Lee went deep into his bench, using nine and ten players. Lee alternated Jill Goldberg and Nicole Marcelli at the starting guard spot opposite Denton, and deployed guard Kris Becker and forwards Renae Sallquist, Andrea Kyser and Robin Adams off the bench.

The game highlights were numerous. Foremost was the victory against Tennessee (see pages 232-33), and the come-from-behind win over Ole Miss in the SEC tournament.

In that game, Vanderbilt trailed by 13 points with 6:14 to play at 59-46, then the Lady Rebels suddenly took on an acute case of offensive rigor mortis.

The Lady Commodores took advantage of the Ole Miss freeze, with Booker, Goldberg, and Peck carrying Vanderbilt down the stretch.

Vanderbilt trailed 64-63 with 12 seconds remaining, and Lee called timeout and ran a play for Peck.

Smith got the ball, drove to the baseline, and then flipped it inside to Peck for a rolling bank hook shot. Peck then blocked the Lady Rebs' attempt to win the game at the buzzer.

There were a bunch of games that Vanderbilt let get away. The Lady Commodores were ahead of Louisiana State by eight points with under two minutes to play, and lost in overtime after a series of turnovers and missed opportunities. Vanderbilt was actually up 6-0, after three very easy buckets, in its NCAA loss to James Madison. The ease with which those six points came apparently contributed to the Lady Commodores lethargy the rest of the way.

And at the SEC tournament, the night after upsetting Ole Miss, Vanderbilt did a complete turnaround, failing to score a field goal and missing a plethora of free throws during the last five minutes while losing to Georgia, 54-53.

But as Karen Booker might say, "Oh, well."

Next year is a new season. Since Booker is the only player lost to graduation, the Lady Commodores might finally break permanently into the nation's top 10. Lee is excited about his team's chances next year, especially with the arrival of freshman phenomenon Barbara Bolden. □

PROFILE : Karen Booker

Basking in the Shadow of Anonymity

By Buster Olney

It was ironic that one of Vanderbilt's most prominent socialites had trouble getting recognition in her other life.

Anyone who walked across campus with Karen Booker knew there would be a thousand or so talk breaks along the way. She simply knew everyone on campus, and everyone on campus knew her.

But in the world of women's basketball, she was lost in a shadow of anonymity.

Booker led the Southeastern Conference in rebounding and steals in 1986, and was second in both categories in 1987. She was Vanderbilt's top scorer this year, averaging a shade under 20 points per game.

But she was not named to a single pre-season team before the 1986-87 season, and until this year she had not been named to any All-SEC team.

Can you figure it? Though Booker excelled in the toughest conference in the world of women's hoops, she was passed over. Instead, in an effort to spread out the awards, the honors were even given to players in the weak Ivy League, which is like ignoring the Soviet Union and dealing arms to Iran.

But Booker, who, quite frankly, was unaffected by the lack of recognition, pressed onward and won her case on the court.

"Karen Booker is one of the greatest players I have ever coached against," said Mississippi coach Van Chancellor after the Lady 'Dore center pulled 21 rebounds against his eighth-ranked club. "Did she score a hundred points?"

Western Kentucky coach Paul Sanderford said, "We thought Booker was going to be one of the best players we saw all year coming in." Booker didn't fail her billing, scoring 23 in the first meeting between the two teams and a career high 30 in the second.

Booker became Vanderbilt's all-time leading rebounder late in the season, after earlier joining Harriet Brumfield, Jackie Cowan, Donna Atkinson, and Barbara Brackman as the only 1,000 point scorers in Lady Commodore history.

Curiously, when Booker graduated, Vanderbilt coach Phil Lee was convinced she was still two years away from her best basketball.

"She certainly hasn't reached her peak," said Lee, "because she's got so much athletic ability."

Booker played the no. 5 position in the Vanderbilt offense, which is usually reserved for a plodding, slow player. But Booker redefined the position. She had the size, hustle and quick feet to be a rebounder, but she also had the running speed to lead the conference in steals and fill the lanes on the fast break.

It wasn't until last season that Booker developed a 12 to 15 foot jumper and became an adequate free throw shooter. Occasionally, she would throw up a shot that would remind you that she hadn't mastered the finesse part of basketball.

But what difference does it make if Booker looked fundamentally sound while running around opponents?

However, Booker's most endearing quality was not her rebounding, scoring, or steals...it was Karen Booker herself, everybody's friend.

"She means a lot more to this program than basketball," said Lee. "She's one of the classiest people to come out of this university, ever, period."

"I'm going to miss her." □

Senior par excellence Karen Booker had an outstanding final season and was an important factor in the Lady Commodore's appearance in the NCAA Championships. Booker led the team in rebounds in 27 of their 34 games, led the scoring attack in 15 games, became Vanderbilt's leading scorer in one season with 608 points, became the school's all-time leading rebounder with 1,079, and was selected to both the All-Southeastern Conference and All-Southeastern Conference Tournament teams in 1987. As a final honor, Booker was selected as the Woman Athlete of the Year. Not a bad season at all. OVER-LEAF: Guard Deborah Denton straightens up her aim at the free throw line. With the Lady Commodores trailing Tennessee 55-50 early in the second half of the Feb. 4 match-up between the two nationally-ranked teams, Lady Vol Karla Horton threw the ball at Vanderbilt's Patsy Smith.

Smith got into Horton's face.

"I was telling her that I was going to keep after her," said Smith. "I was letting her know that I wasn't going to back down."

The scene was reminiscent of Rocky III, when Rocky takes a clean shot from Clubber Lang, scowls, and yells "Ain't so bad! Ain't so bad!"

"That kind of got us fired up," said Vanderbilt center Karen Booker.

Vanderbilt coach Phil Lee said, "It might have been the turning point."

The homesteading Lady Commodores came back after taking all the Lady Vols' cheap shots to upset Tennessee, the eventual national champions, 77-76 in front of a record-setting crowd.

"Without a doubt this is the biggest regular season victory for us," said Lee. "I said before the game that this was going to be a street fight, not in the literal sense, but that we were going to have to come out with our gloves on. In the second half, we went after them." □

Men's Basketball

From a Lion to a Lamb

By David Loffredo

If there is one thing that the Vanderbilt men's basketball season can be compared to, it's the month of March. As the saying goes, "In like a lion and out like a lamb." Okay, so it takes a little imagination but it still applies.

The team roared into the season with a 9-1 record: the champions of the Silversword Invitational Tournament, the Music City Invitational Tournament, and the upsetter of second ranked and eventual national champion Indiana University.

"Our season start was incredible," said coach M. Newton. "We beat some very good teams and controlled our own destiny."

But before you could say "how many days are there in March?", the lion turned into a lamb. After losing the Sugar Bowl Tournament on two last second shots, nothing seemed to go the Commodores' way and they struggled to an 18-16 finish.

It was a season of buzzer shots and blowouts. A season that saw big wins against top teams and tough losses to others.

The season began on the shores of the Hawaiian Islands on the island of Maui. Three days after it began, Vanderbilt was crowned the champion of the Silversword Invitational Tournament with wins over Virginia Commonwealth, 75-67, the University of Missouri, 69-54, and the University of New Mexico, 87-71. The players returned to Nashville International Airport sporting baseball caps reading "3-0".

The fourth consecutive victory came in the home opener blowout over the University of Tennessee-Chattanooga, 93-64. Center Will Perdue set the scoring pace with 23 points and 9 rebounds. Sophomore forward Frank Kornet added 11 points and 6 rebounds in the win.

Three days later, the Commodores were handed their first loss by a tough Duke squad, 78-66. At one time in the second half, Vanderbilt was down by 30 points, but could only close the gap to 12.

"Getting back into the game was very important for our team," said Newton. "The players showed a lot of composure and did what they had to do, but just came up short." Perdue led the Commodore attempt with 16 points and 12 rebounds in the loss.

Then came the biggest win of the season (see pages 242-43). Indiana University came into Memorial Gymnasium riding on the coattails of All-American guard Steve Alford and ranked second in the nation. But the Commodore faithful were ready, armed with the Vanderbilt Hustler "Stevie" calendars. Alford did what he could, leading all scorers with 28 points, but it wasn't enough because Indiana fell 79-75. Sophomore Barry Goheen paced the Vanderbilt offensive attack with 26 points and 6 rebounds. Perdue added 15 points and 9 boards.

The magic continued in Pennsylvania. Down 70-68 with time expiring, Goheen hit a fall-away 25 footer to win at the buzzer, 71-70. "Penn played us tough," said Newton. "That was a good win for our team but we didn't deserve it." Perdue led all scorers with 29 points.

The team then returned home to host and eventually win the Music City Invitational Tournament. The 'Dores won the opener over Tennessee Tech easily, 89-65. Senior forward Glen Clem and sophomore guard Barry Booker led the squad with 18 points apiece. Vanderbilt edged Kansas State, 79-72, to take the crown. Freshman guard Scott Draud led the offense with 19 points, followed by Perdue with 17 and 11 rebounds.

Down on the Bayou, the 'Dores stunned Louisiana State, winning at the buzzer, 63-61. Draud led the Commodores with 16 points, assisted by Clem with 12 points and 13 rebounds.

Then the lion died.

Disaster first struck at the Sugar Bowl Tournament in New Orleans, where the Commodores finished last in a four team field. In the opener, the 'Dores led South Carolina by as much as 12 points in the second half, before the Gamecocks hit a shot at the buzzer to send the game into overtime. At the end of the first overtime, another South Carolina desperation shot kept them alive, and they ended up outdistancing Vanderbilt, 96-91, in the end. Perdue led all scorers in the marathon with 23 points.

The consolation game was another heartbreaker. Up 72-70 with time running out, a Houston player threw up a desperation three-pointer, which caught nothing but net, handing the 'Dores their second tough loss in as many days, 73-72. Booker and Goheen paced the Commodore attack with 17 points each, and Perdue added 16 more.

Trouble followed the team back home. Three days after losing the tournament, the University of Tennessee defeated the Commodores on their own court, in front of a student-less crowd, 81-72. Goheen tried to thwart off the Vol attack with 23 points and 8 boards, and Perdue added 22 points in a losing effort.

Against Ole Miss in Memorial Gym, Goheen and Perdue paced the Commodore attack with 17 and 16 points respectively to end the losing streak at three.

Just when it looked like things were back on the right track, the 'Dores met up with a tough Alabama team and fell short by four points 75-71. Booker paced the Commodore attack with 22 points.

Then came "the worst game that we played all season," as described by Newton. Vanderbilt was simply destroyed by a powerful Georgia team 76-53. Booker again led the team, this time with 16 points in the hopeless cause.

But the Commodores refused to roll over and die. Against 11th ranked Auburn, Vanderbilt went to work, winning handily. Draud led all scorers with 23 points, followed by Perdue with 22 and 10 rebounds.

Expectations were high when the University of Kentucky came to town but the Wildcats proved to be too much for the 'Dores, winning a hard fought battle by 6 points, 71-65. Perdue led the squad with 20 points and 6 boards. Goheen added 16 points of his own in the losing effort.

Another tough loss followed, this one down at the University of Florida, 85-81. "The Florida game and both Alabama games were tough losses," said Newton. "If we had gotten the breaks at the end, they would have been three more victories. They were all good games." Booker led the offense with 16 points, while Perdue added 15 more.

The Commodores took out their aggressions on an unsuspecting Mississippi State team. Vanderbilt won the game easily with hot shooting from Perdue and Booker, each with 16 points.

Louisiana State came to town hoping to avenge its two-point loss from earlier in the season. But things just did not go their way. Down by one point with four seconds remaining in the game, LSU guard Darryl Joe lost control of the in-bounds pass after he dribbled it off his foot. Vanderbilt won the game, 66-65. Perdue led all scorers with 22 points and Goheen added 11 more in the dramatic win. Unfortunately, the 'Dores could not put it together two days later in Knoxville. The University of Tennessee outlasted Vanderbilt in overtime, 79-69. Perdue suffered an injured foot in the fourth quarter but continued to play after a short rest. He led the Vanderbilt offense with 15 points.

A national television audience saw Vanderbilt beat an overrated Notre Dame team led by guard David Rivers. The Commodore defense held Rivers to only 12 points in the sloppy 60-56 win. Draud paced the offense with 14 points, while Perdue added 13 points of his own and 8 rebounds. Then came the five game losing streak, which cost the Commodores an NCAA Tournament bid. The streak began in Oxford, Mississippi, where the Ole Miss Rebels blasted the Commodores, 77-54. Perdue had 18 points in the losing cause.

A seemingly different team traveled to Alabama, but the result was another loss. Vanderbilt gave the highly ranked Alabama a run for their money before losing in the closing minutes, 71-67. Booker had 21 points in the loss, while Perdue added 12 points and 8 rebounds.

Then came another blowout, this time in Georgia against the Bulldogs. Vanderbilt was never in the game and lost by 16 points, 75-59. Booker led the 'Dores with 16 points.

The streak continued in Lexington, Kentucky, where Vanderbilt fell short to the Wildcats, this time by 11 points, 65-54. Senior forward Bobby Westbrook led the team with 12 points.

The last of the five losses, a 91-83 defeat by Auburn, left the Commodores at the .500 mark for the season with a 14-14 record. Perdue led Vanderbilt in the loss with 23 points and 10 boards. After a 9-1 start, the team had only won 5 of its last 18 games.

After two weeks without a win, Vanderbilt finally put it together at home against Florida with a convincing 84-76 victory. Goheen paced the attack with 23 points.

The last game of the regular season was another win for the 'Dores, this one against Mississippi State. Vanderbilt, led by Goheen with 15 points, won a battle, 66-58.

With a 16-14 record, the only hope for an NCAA Tournament bid rested in the Southeastern Conference Tournament because the champion automatically received a bid. Unfortunately, Vanderbilt faced its regular season nemesis, the University of Tennessee in the opening round. As they had done twice earlier in the season, the Vols made quick work of the 'Dores, and won easily, 74-57. Perdue led Vanderbilt with 15 points and 11 rebounds.

The semi-successful season did, however, earn the Commodores a place in the 32 team field of the National Invitational Tournament (see pages 252-55). Vanderbilt's opening foe was Jacksonville. In front of only 6,000 fans at home, the 'Dores snuck by the Dolphins, 74-72. Perdue led the Commodores attack with 18 points and 11 rebounds.

The next round of the tournament was a blowout, as a confident Vanderbilt team blasted Florida State, 109-92. Booker and Perdue led all scorers with 22 points apiece, while Westbrook added 20.

The final game of the season turned out to be in the quarterfinal round of the tournament against the eventual NIT champion, the University of Southern Mississippi. "USM couldn't play any better than they did against us," commented a bewildered coach Newton after the 95-88 loss.

USM shot an amazing 66.7 percent from the field in the first half and only missed two of 24 foul shots. Perdue led the Commodore attempt with 24 points and 18 rebounds in the season ending loss.

"Looking back, it was a successful season," said Newton. "I expected Perdue to play well and he did. Our young guards played as well as I could have hoped and the ten game streak with Westbrook on the bench really hurt us."

The seven foot center Perdue established himself as a force in the SEC and all of college basketball by shattering the Vanderbilt blocked shot and dunk records. "Will played very well. I was happy for him," said Newton.

While Perdue will return to the Commodore squad next season, they will be without the services of Bobby Westbrook, Steve Reece, Glen Clem, and Randy Neff. Said Newton, "All of the seniors will be sorely missed. I am always sorry to see players leave, but it makes me feel good to see them graduate, and I wish them all the best in their future endeavors."

Despite rumors which surfaced at the close of the season, freshman Scott Draud will be in a Vanderbilt uniform next fall. Draud was concerned about his lack of playing time behind two sophomores, but he has decided to stick it out with Vanderbilt. Behind Draud and the other freshmen, a new line of recruits will look for playing time. They are led by 6'11" center Fred Benjamin from New York City. Also signed are Charles Mayes, a 6'7" forward from Montgomery Bell Academy in Nashville, 6'7" forward Steve Grant from Marietta, Georgia, and 6'2" guard Scott Laughinghouse from Huntsville, Alabama.

Concluded Newton, "We played well all season. Inexperience hurt us, but I don't see that as a problem next season. We look strong for 1987." □

Throughout the 1986-87 basketball season, the Commodores were continually plagued by questionable calls by the Southeastern Conference referees that worked the games. After all, it was not uncommon for each official to work four or five SEC games a week, so fatigue could have resulted in these errors. VANDERBILT 79 INDIANA 75

By David Loffredo

Men's Basketball

It was the "Miracle in Memorial Gym." Fans rushed onto the gym floor, students danced in the streets, the national spotlight shined on a little school in Nashville.

This team, which touted a seven-foot center with the largest feet in college basketball, had done the impossible by stunning the second ranked and eventual national champion, Indiana University.

"It was a very well played, intense ball game," said coach C.M. Newton. "I was proud of the efforts of both teams, and would have felt the same had we lost."

The intensity began as the starting line-ups were announced. On the sidelines, Mr. Commodore swung a chair from the end of a rope, sort of a reminder to Indiana coach Bobby Knight of one of his previous temper tantrums, when he actually threw one onto the court. In the stands, 5,000 student fans held mock calendars of All-American guard Steve Alford and chanted "Stevie, Stevie." The calendars parodied the one in which Alford appeared earlier in the season, which resulted in his temporary suspension.

But the real action was on the court.

Down by 9 points at the half, the Vanderbilt offense went into high gear and took the lead for good on Frank Kornet's free throw with 8:22 left. The 'Dores built an eight point lead, 74-68, with 3:04 left before the Hoosiers made a run at it. Daryl Thomas hit a shot with 1:00 on the clock and the Vanderbilt lead was cut to three, 78-75. Barry Booker hit a free throw with 20 seconds left to put the final points on the board and then stole the ball after a missed Alford shot with 9 seconds left on the clock. This Indiana error sealed the biggest victory of the season.

"This [game] is important because it is going to give us some national exposure. To be recognized as a good team, you have to play well against the teams like Indiana," Barry Goheen told the reporters after the game. Goheen led the Commodores with 26 points, 20 of them coming in the second half.

"We played the game we had to play to win it," said Newton. "If we missed some shots, they would have won. It was a hard fought battle."

After the loss, coach Knight snapped at the Nashville press before entering his locker room. "We got a 9 point lead and that was the extent of what we did in the second half. We just didn't deserve to win."

After talking to his players, Knight went into the Vanderbilt locker room to congratulate Perdue and Goheen before getting on the bus and heading home.

"Bobby and I are long time friends," said Newton. "A lot of coaches don't like playing against friends, but he's a class act." □

PROFILE : Bobby Westbrook

A Winner Completes His College Career

By David Loffredo

May 8th, 1987 was a big day for Bobby Westbrook. No, it wasn't the day he led the Vanderbilt basketball team to a big victory, or the day of his last college basketball game. No, May 8th was a bigger day...the day he graduated from college.

"I'm very proud of Bobby for sticking with it and getting his degree," said coach C.M. Newton. "Although I am sad when my players graduate, it fills me with pride to see how they have matured."

In his six years at the Commodore helm, all of Newton's players have graduated. For some, however, the road wasn't an easy one.

The 6-6, 200 pound forward was drafted out of Carver High School in Memphis, where he was a consensus all-state selection his senior year. He averaged 18 points and 13 rebounds per game.

In his freshman year with the Commodores, Westbrook played in all 33 games, helping the team to a 19-14 record and an National Invitational Tournament (NIT) berth. He averaged 3.3 points and 2.6 rebounds per game, and was third on the team with 13 blocked shots.

"Bobby was an exciting player for the fans to watch," commented Newton. "He was fast and aggressive, and always seemed to make things happen."

In his sophomore year, Westbrook increased his contributions to the team. He ranked second on the squad in rebounding with 5.0 boards per game, and fifth in scoring with 5.3 points. In the season opener, he had 12 points and nine rebounds, which were his highs for the season.

"Bobby became more of a team player for us during his sophomore season," continued Newton. "He was a real factor on the court."

Then tragedy struck. In the fourth game of the season, Westbrook severely injured his knee and needed arthroscopic knee surgery. In the four games that he had played, Westbrook scored a total of 48 points (12 per game average), which put him on a record setting pace. Because of the injury, Westbrook was granted medical redshirt status.

"We'll never know how good Bobby could have been that season," said Newton. "I hate to think about things that can never be."

But Bobby was back for the following season and determined to pick up where he left off. "It felt incredible in the home opener against Duke when they announced my name and the crowd cheered," said Westbrook. "I was afraid that I would never hear the crowd call me again after my injury."

And Bobby responded, ranking second on the team in rebounding with 5.7 per game, and contributing 7.3 points per game. His 7 blocked shots were also second best on a talented Commodore squad. His biggest game of the season was the 60-59 come-from-behind win over Tennessee in Nashville. Westbrook had a season high 13 points.

"That was a great game," said Westbrook. "I was really pumped up, and it felt great to win."

Bobby was also a force in Vanderbilt's 62-59 victory over Florida at home. With seconds left on the clock, Westbrook snatched a loose rebound, which secured the win.

However, things quickly went downhill from there. At the close of the school year, Bobby was kicked off the team because of poor grades. Determined to remain on the team and stay in school, Westbrook took summer school courses to make up credits and was back in the black and gold in the fall.

Westbrook's senior year was like a roller coaster ride.

He started at the top by helping the Commodores to three wins in the Silversword Invitational Tournament in Maui. But, while many players brought back souvenirs for their families and friends, Westbrook returned with an injured elbow, which sidelined him for ten games.

Then came his slow ascension up the final hill. He was scoreless in the 66-59 win over Mississippi. But eventually, Westbrook was back in the scoring column, scoring a point in each of the losses to Alabama and Georgia. Then he exploded with 15 points and 5 boards in a big win, 91-75, over Auburn.

Bobby was back, and he would continue to be a force to be reckoned with for the remainder of the season, scoring a year high 20 points against Florida State in the NIT.

Concluded Newton, "Bobby was a class act...a good ball player and a great guy. I wish him all the best." □

Two moments to be remembered by Bobby Westbrook: collegiate athletic competition and graduation. Always a crowd favorite on the court, Westbrook had to sit out a portion of his senior season due to an injured elbow that he suffered in the finals of the Hawaiian Airlines Tournament. However, he worked his way back to health and contributed his experience and leadership to this young team. Of course, his graduation also proved to be memorable because, emulating graduating Commodore photographers, he carried his camera across the platform and took a picture of himself shaking the Chancellor's hand. However, to the delight of his fellow graduates, he stopped midway across the stage and took a picture of them.

Vanderbilt's own "stuffing machine," Will Perdue, also known as "Sir Dunkalot," was a major reason for the Commodore's success this season. He started all 34 games at center, he was the high scorer in 16 of them, and was the top rebounder in all but 7. Perdue scored a career high 34 points against Southern Mississippi, made 13 field goals against Pennsylvania, attempted 20 field goals against Tennessee, had 16 rebounds against Kentucky, and had a field goal percentage of 87.5 against Mississippi. Not a bad season at all.

Commodores Win Two, Then Falter in NIT

By David Loffredo

Vanderbilt's selection to the 32-team field of the National Invitational Tournament was met with mixed reviews.

"The team was disappointed that we hadn't played well enough to merit an NCAA Tournament bid," said coach C.M. Newton. "That was our goal at the outset of the season and we didn't reach it. Anyway, we were happy to continue playing."

Poor attendance (6000 average) at the opening two rounds expressed the fans' disappointment and displeasure. But the Commodores had come to play.

And play they did.

Because of the NIT format, no team knew their next opponent or location of the game until only a couple of days prior to the contest. "That is hard on both coaching staffs," continued Newton. "You like to have time to scout and prepare for your next game, but neither side could do that."

As it turned out, all three of Vanderbilt's games were in Memorial Gym.

The Commodores' opening foe was Jacksonville. The game was a see-saw battle, with Vanderbilt taking control in the waning moments and winning by two points 74-72. Senior center Will Perdue paced the offense with 18 points and eleven rebounds.

Four days later the Commodores returned to Memorial Gym to face another Florida team, this time the Florida State Seminoles. While the first half was close, the Vanderbilt offense opened it up in the second, winning handily 109-92. Sophomore guard Barry Booker and Perdue led all scorers with 22 points apiece, while senior forward Bobby Westbrook tossed in 20 of his own.

The final game before the tournament moved to New York City pitted the Dorees against a menacing University of Southern Mississippi team. "Our team just played their hearts out," Newton said after the loss. "USM was just unstoppable." After going into the half down 16 points and later 20, the Commodores outscored their opponents 24-4 to tie up the game with seven minutes left. Unfortunately, the offense ran out of steam and the Dorees lost by seven 95-88. Perdue led the VU offense with 24 points, including nine dunks, and 18 rebounds.

Ten days later, USM was crowned king of the NIT Tournament after easily defeating La Salle in the finals. □

It was a season that started off with a bang and ended in disappointment. The first ten games were a dream come true: 9 wins and 1 loss. However, a middle stretch of 5 wins and 8 losses caused this young team to question its ability to win "the big one," a complete change in attitude from the beginning of the season. The final stretch of 11 games saw Vanderbilt win only 4, which completed their slide to the bottom of the Southeastern Conference heap. Yet what if the Commodores had won the National Invitational Tournament? They lost to the eventual champion, whom they could have beaten had the breaks gone their way. But they didn't. However, this team will be back next year...so look out conference, here come the Commodores.

Men's Swimming and Diving

A Long Swim Upstream

By John MacKinnon

MEADOWS

Not since 1968 was Vanderbilt considered a powerhouse in men's swimming in the Southeastern Conference. Like many other SEC sports, swimming is very strong within the ten team, seven state conference. Again, it was not a year that Swimming World magazine would rank the Commodores, but the end record demonstrated that the undermanned, non-scholarship Vanderbilt swimmers were definitely having a tough time pulling in wins in the 1986-87 season.

The team immediately started out on a downturn, losing its first eight meets before finally beating a hapless Tennessee State team in Nashville. Much if the team, however, did not view this as a legitimate victory, but they were happy to have the win nonetheless. Tennessee State had a total of eight swimmers, so all that Vanderbilt had to do was swim people in as many events as possible to nail down the win.

The lack of the dual meet victories overshadowed some key happenings for the season. The team was lead by senior captain Trev Emerson, Emerson, from Jackson, Miss., led the team into its most difficult year, swimming against no less than four SEC teams in head to head competition. Emerson, like most of the team, saved his best swim at Vanderbilt for his last. At the Southeastern Conference Regional Championships in Tuscaloosa, Emerson turned in a personal best time in the backstroke to cap his four years as a Commodore letter winner.

Another set of swimmers who improved under first-year coach Pete Feters were Monte Lewis, David Harrison, and Chris White. Lewis, hailing from the major metropolis of Ponca City, Oklahoma, kept bettering his personal best in both the 500-yard and 1000-yard freestyle swims, finishing with his best time at the SEC meet. Harrison and Chris White both did the same for Feters.

The biggest surprise of the year had to be Sophomore diver Dan Self. Self, a high school diver in Chattanooga, never thought of diving for Vanderbilt. But that didn't mean he had an aversion to the pool area. Self began the year as a lifeguard during off-peak hours in the gym. First-year diving coach Sharron Cassleman just out of the blue saw Self diving one day and asked him if he would like to come out for the team. Self was reluctant at first, knowing the work involved might take its toll on his school work (Self was a Dean's list student), but decided to join the team.

Self made an immediate impact, winning his first two meets and placing in every one. He even scored in the SEC diving competition, something that Vanderbilt had not done in a few years. Having two years of eligibility left however, Self's best appears to be ahead of him.

Frustration had to be the key word when describing the Vanderbilt men's swim team's performance this year. The Commodores were hit hard immediately by a new rule that gave points to the top seven places, instead of the former system of the top three. Vanderbilt did not have as many bodies to put into the water, so they were at a disadvantage from the outset. Therefore, the dual meet record of the team might have caused some unaware eyes to wonder if Vanderbilt should even have a swim team. For those eyes, a suggestion. Look into the water and not just at the surface level, you'll see things a little clearer. □

Women's Swimming and Diving

Lady Commodores Face a Transitional Year

By Pokey MacKinnon

Question marks. From the end of the 1985-86 women's varsity swim season, the program was full of them. Who would replace John Smith, head swimming coach of 20 seasons, who retired amidst scandalous rumors of financial wrongdoings and dubious coaching practices?

Who would take the leadership role on the team without any internal guidance? Could the Lady Commodores compete on a level with other Southeastern Conference schools? Finally, would the insertion of the new scoring system (the first seven finishers receive points as opposed to just the first three) hamper Vanderbilt's chances in dual meets because they are a team with a small number of swimmers?

Yet along with every question, there was an answer. In July, former assistant coach Pete Feters was lured back to Nashville to take helm of the Lady Commodores. Feters, who returned from Michigan State, beefed up the Commodores' schedule by adding every SEC team except Georgia and Florida. He believed that better competition would bring down the finishing times of the Vanderbilt swimmers...which it did.

But victories did not come easy. The Lady Commodores lost four of their first five meets.

While the swimmers were busy trying to lower their times, the divers were doing the opposite by trying to raise their scores. First year coach Sharon Castleman was reunited with her former high school pupil, NCAA Division II All-American diver Patty Woodcock. Woodcock, who had been under the direction of Evelyn Newton for her first three years at Vanderbilt, entered her final year with a new coach and new divers. Lauren Szabo, Crissy Diaz, and Beth Bowman were all recruited by Newton.

Newton, furthermore, was so confident in the ability of Castleman, that she told Athletic Director Roy Kramer that she would retire only if Castleman replaced her.

The leadership role was assumed by Carole Cristel, a senior from East Lansing, Michigan. Cristel, who had been hampered by back problems throughout most of her career, turned in her finest time in her final meet at the SEC Championships in Tuscaloosa, Alabama.

In the freestyle events, the sprints were split up between senior Susan Alexander and sophomore Bonnie Harre. Frequently, these two were found in both first and second places in dual meet competition.

In the freestyle, the loss of sophomore Noelle Levasseur, who left school, created a void that Feters could not fill.

However, the biggest surprise of this season came from Vero Beach, Florida, and her name was Wendy Deacon. Deacon had done well during her freshman year but flourished after she qualified for the Senior Nationals in Orlando, Florida. With the summer training in tow, Deacon came back to Vanderbilt with the desire for winning, which she did in every dual meet except for a loss to the Goodwill Games three-time medalist, Angel Meyers.

When Deacon went to Tuscaloosa for the SEC championships, Coach Feters had hoped that she would be in the top four in the 100-yard backstroke. Going into the finals, she was seeded second only to Georgia's Linda Leith. But Deacon came from behind in the final turn to beat Leith in the finals to capture the SEC title, which was something that has never happened to Vanderbilt before in swimming.

"When I got up to the winner's podium," said Deacon, "people stopped and noticed when it was announced, that the winner from Vanderbilt University...because they had were surprised that anyone from Vanderbilt could do so well."

For Feters, this was the high point to a disappointing dual season record. However, this was a transition year in which all of his swimmers did their personal best. □

Lacrosse

Still Dominating Opponents

By Pokey MacKinnon

It was a game that got its origins from the various tribes of Indians that settled in the North Atlantic area. After the contests, the winners survived and were congratulated, but the losers were killed.

Today, there are still winners in the game, and yes, there are still losers. But the losers, unlike the games that the Indians played, are still around to play again.

For over a year and a half the Vanderbilt Lacrosse program had never tasted defeat. The Commodores seemed to master the Mid-South region in a sport that did not attract many players. After all, the main contact sport at many schools utilized a pigskin balloon, not sticks that hurled a rock-hard, two-inch circular ball.

Coming off a 3-0 season the previous year with the same starting team, second year captain Greg Sousloff felt that it would be another banner year for the squad.

"The only person we lost due to graduation was attackman John Simmons," said Sousloff. "And I'm very glad with the number of freshman that came out and played. There really is a good crop of talent, and they are the reason why this program keeps going."

Vanderbilt seemed to be humming along as the Commodores blasted any team that got in their way for the first three contests of the season, which pushed their unbeaten streak to six games.

In the season opener, Vanderbilt traveled to Athens, Georgia to play a tough Bulldog team. The Commodores spotted the Bulldogs two goals before coming back and crushing them 16-4. Second year player Brad White single-handedly beat Georgia by scoring five goals himself.

Vanderbilt then came back to Nashville for their home-opener against a club team from Memphis. Again, the Commodores were down early, but came back to win 9-3, sending the the Memphis team home with a serious case of the blues. After the game, Sousloff commented, "Our shooting has improved from last year. Offensively we have a lot more ball movement."

The Commodores played Alabama during Parents Weekend on the newly re-sodded Purdy Field. Vanderbilt had never played the Crimson Tide, so it appeared that the obscurity surrounding "the team from Tuscaloosa" would be beneficial to the Tide. Alabama started out well by scoring first but they could not fend off the powerful Commodore offense forever. Vanderbilt led at the half, 8-2. Alabama tried everything, including the 14 year old coach's son, but still fell to the 'Dores 14-7.

Could the Commodores be stopped? Of course. They could not claim to be the best team in the south, with Duke and North Carolina within the top ten in the nation. However, another undefeated season would give the sport prominence at a campus that was literally unaware of it.

Georgia Tech would have been next, but they cancelled because they could not find the transportation necessary to come play in Nashville. The squad travelled to Lexington the following week to play Kentucky but they turned back when they saw three inches of...snow...on the playing field. It was mid-April!

The following week was the University of Alabama Lacrosse Tournament in Tuscaloosa, which proved to be eventful for the 'Dores.

Vanderbilt had an easy game with Rhodes, beating them 9-1 Saturday, but seemed to come apart at the seams the next morning against Auburn, a team which had only beaten Alabama by a single goal.

Although Vanderbilt took a 4-2 lead into the second-half, the team unraveled and ended up blowing its lead. After trading goals with the Tigers, the Commodores eventually lost, 8-7. The game-winning goal came within the last two minutes of play. It was the first time in two years that Vanderbilt had lost a scheduled lacrosse game.

"We didn't play up to our capability," said Sousloff. "Everyone made mental errors, so I couldn't point the finger to one part of the team. Auburn also played well when they had to."

Vanderbilt finished their 5-1 season by spanking a poor University of the South team, 27-3. Attackmen Brad White, Jon Blum, David Goldstein, and Eugene Lee all had big games, each finding the Sewanee net a number of times.

The team was supposed to have a season-ending game with arch-rival Tennessee, but the Tennessee captain had to cancel because the squad no longer existed.

So, Vanderbilt ended another successful season in a sport that it seems to dominate in the area. Gone with the 5-1 season are eight senior starters; Lee and Goldstein at attack, Alex Irving, Rob Prioleau and Blum at midfield, and Spencer Ragland, Teddy Chambers and Sousloff at defense, leaving only Brad White and goaltender Brad Reynold as starters on next years' squad.

Reynolds, who first picked up a lacrosse stick as a freshman in college, is now the President for next year's team...a squad that has a lot of tradition to uphold. □

When it comes to domination in a sport in the Mid-South, the Vanderbilt lacrosse team is close to becoming the definition. The squad, led by senior Greg Soussloff, completed another successful season on Purdy Field.

Fencing

The Tradition Continues

By Stephanie Abernathy and Cynthia Ziegler

Fencing is like chess played at 100 mph, for it combines concentration, play, and action.

Both students and faculty have become interested in fencing over the past year, thus making the Vanderbilt Fencing Club a more popular club. The sport originated on campus in 1898 when Dr. Ernest Griffith, a nationally recognized fencing instructor, taught a class of 12 students. This year, with the addition of a fencing coach, the club has grown tremendously according to club president, Cynthia Ziegler. Coach Gary Lide, the chairman of the Tennessee Division of the United States Fencing Association, has volunteered to instruct interested fencers twice a week.

At the start of the season, students signed up at the Activities Fair. When classes started in September, class was offered twice a week, yielding an average turnout of over thirty. Lide started the fencers off with the basic footwork and then advanced to arm work and weaponry. Coordination is a main key to success in fencing, thus emphasis is placed upon timing of attacks.

Josh Whitmer, treasurer of the club, remarked, "Fencing truly integrates physical and mental aspects [of a sport]. You don't have to be 6-foot-2-inches and weigh 250 lbs. to win a fencing match. The opponents are equally matched as far as weaponry; it has to do with what you have upstairs."

By the end of a month and a half of practice, the new fencers were proficient enough to participate in the Cumberland Open, which was held here in the Peabody Gym. The Fencing Club sponsored the event which brought participants from Knoxville who represented the University of Tennessee. Members, even beginners, placed in this open.

After the Cumberland Open, the new and old fencers practiced four days per week in order to prepare for other tournaments. The Club traveled to Cincinnati, to Chattanooga, to Tuscaloosa and to Knoxville. In Tuscaloosa, the tournament was actually a "fun fence" where members of different clubs got together and practiced in order to perfect their skill.

Skill is a needed quality of any fencer, unlike the preconceived notions that we get from watching any flick of the Three Musketeers or Zoro. The quality of this year's participants is greatly due to the efforts of the coach.

"The acquisition of a new coach has done well," said Whitmer. "Gary has brought a lot of emphasis to the more subtle aspects of the sport."

"Having a coach [unlike past years when the club did not have one] has helped a lot; it has made practice more productive," said Ziegler.

Fencing skill comes in many forms. In combining footwork and arm extension, a fencer's timing must be exact. Point control is another aspect that requires much time in perfecting. Maybe fencing is like chess played at 100mph, but when out on strip, a fencer really does not realize that he is thinking about the next move to make. It is a characteristic that is almost innate. This is largely due to hours of drilling which is done by the club members. Just as in any sport, practice leads to perfection, and the Vanderbilt Fencing Club, although not a varsity sport, practices four times a week for sessions of two hours.

The club cannot become a varsity team because there are no other teams in the SEC. Therefore, whenever the club travels for meets, the members fence individually.

The second semester brought a few changes for the club. A beginners' class was offered again and three new beginners came to learn the sport. Lide also began teaching epee and sabre along with the usual lessons in foil. These three weapons are all different and involve different skills.

Since its beginning in 1898 the Fencing Club has had its ups and downs. The present organization began in 1964 when two students convinced Dr. Richard Stearns, the team's current faculty advisor, to teach foil fencing. The club has grown since then and with the growing number of fencers on campus, the club has the potential to grow even more than it has this year. □

On even the gloomiest of nights in Memorial Gymnasium, a contingent of fifteen to twenty die-hard members of the Vanderbilt fencing club can be found jabbing each other with foils and sabers in the north hall. I wonder if Alexander Dumas started this way?

Field Hockey

Season Successful Despite Losing Record

By Nancy Mannon

The 1986 Vanderbilt women's field hockey team got off to a good start this year although the final season's scores may not reflect it. The players were enthusiastic and ready to get the season going. Furthermore, there was an increase in the number of new players, which was a sign of a successful year.

The season featured two matches against Emory and three against Sewanee, which turned into a final record of one win, two losses, and two ties.

The season opened at home on September 7th as a scrimmage against Sewanee on Peabody Field. Down 0-2 at the half, the Lady 'Dores came back in the third quarter and began to apply pressure on the Sewanee goal. Finally, freshman Merrylea VanNorstrand put the ball in the goal for the first Vanderbilt score. The score stood 2-1 in Sewanee's favor throughout most of the fourth period until freshman Elizabeth Anderson scored the tying goal in the last five minutes of the game.

It was very satisfying to tie the University of the South, 2-2, because it was something that Vanderbilt had never done before. Furthermore, the Lady 'Dores had only been practicing as a group for three days and were still out of shape from the summer.

Yet captain Pam Appleby said that this year's squad were in better shape at this point in time than last year's squad at the end of their season. The combination of this year's incoming freshman talent and the returning starters from last year made for a promising season.

However, the Lady Commodores did not fare so well in their next game against Emory in Atlanta. Battling the overgrown turf and the 95 degree temperature, Vanderbilt jumped to a 1-0 lead with a goal by freshman Flynn Jones. But the rest of the game was played on the defensive, which resulted in many of the girls tiring out prematurely. Emory eventually got off a shot and tied the game, 1-1.

On October 11th, the team played two matches against Emory and the University of the South. The Lady Commodores were not as strong offensively as Sewanee, which worked to their disadvantage, so they went down in defeat.

In Vanderbilt's second game, which was against Emory, the Lady Commodores got a taste of revenge by downing them in a 3-1 win.

However, Emory had only had a 30 minute rest in between games, while the Lady 'Dores had had two hours rest. The Lady Commodores lept ahead with goals by Flynn Jones and sophomore Shannon Davis. However, the team got careless and allowed Emory to score. But the final goal by senior Pam Appleby sealed up the victory for the Lady Commodores.

The final game of the season was a true battle on Purdy Field. Once again, Vanderbilt played Sewanee. Vanderbilt jumped ahead first with two goals by Karry Connolly but Sewanee came from behind to tie the game in the second half and then secured the lead near the end of the match. However, due to fatigue and questionable officiating, the Lady Commodores were unable to come back. It was a rough game, but Vanderbilt finished their season fighting.

The girls are excited about next year and are looking forward to putting more games on the calendar, including a jamboree of the field hockey teams in the Southeastern Conference. □

IN LOVING MEMORY:

Paul Anthony Lomanto

A True Fighter and a True Winner

By Watson Brown

I loved Paul Lomanto. Our whole football team loved Paul Lomanto. In fact, everybody that Paul touched loved him because he was just that kind of a guy.

On the day that Paul passed away, one of his nurses was very emotional. She came up to me and said that she had seen many people in and out of the hospital, but no one had ever affected the whole nursing station like Paul did.

I also remember the two days that I spent in Gloversville, New York with his family before the funeral. The whole town thought the world of Paul. Lines of people waited in the streets to see him in the funeral home. In fact, the church mass the next day was standing room only. It was just an unbelievable sight.

Paul was one of those unique people with a huge heart, but at the same time, he was also a great competitor. Even when I visited him in the hospital and observed the pain he was going through, he always tried to make me and everyone else around him feel comfortable. He seemed more concerned about others than he was about himself.

Paul was also one of the best competitors that I have ever been honored to coach. He was in my office more than any other player on the team because he wanted to become one of my best defensive tackles. I'm sure that he would have been a very good player if he had stayed healthy.

Paul really hated to lose. He would be as upset as anybody on our team after our defeats. He felt this same way after our losses, even though he had not played.

Paul really fought to overcome his problems. While battling his illness, he worked very hard as a student and never gave up his hope of becoming a great Southeastern Conference tackle.

Paul fought until the end. The day before he died, I went to see him in his room. He was very weak and could hardly move. When I walked in, his dad said, "Paul, Coach Brown is here." A little smile came over his face. He was so weak and yet he raised his thumb up at me to let me know that he was doing fine and still fighting.

In a world where we have strayed from understanding what winning really is, it takes people like Paul to bring us back to earth.

Winning is doing the best that you can do. It is when things get tough that you rise to the occasion and compete even harder.

Winning is having class. You must be a very confident person to be a winner, but at the same time you must understand the role that you play in the situation that you are in.

I believe very strongly in the statement that "winners don't always win, but a true winner does everything he can to win."

Paul Lomanto exemplified this ideal better than anybody that I know. We'll all miss Paul but we'll never forget him. He has given us all a lesson in the true meaning of "winning." In short, Paul Lomanto was, is, and always will be a winner.

The Vanderbilt football team has dedicated the 1987 season to Paul Lomanto.

We, the family at the Commodore, wish to extend our deepest sympathy to the family and friends of Paul Lomanto. We only pray that we have done him justice. He has been an inspiration of strength to us all, and we wish to dedicate the 1987 Vanderbilt Commodore sports section to him and to his memory. □

Alternative Spring Break

Service

The Vanderbilt Alternative Spring Break Program was started in 1987 with a goal of promoting student awareness of the world outside of Vanderbilt. More than fifty students volunteered to spend one week in four impoverished areas. One group went to a Sioux Indian Reservation in South Dakota, living with Indian families and doing construction work on the Sioux YMCA center. Another group ventured to Clear Fork Valley in the Appalachian Mountains, where they worked with the community and assisted with a Christmas tree project for the children. Another group of students traveled to Mexico where they assisted in the construction of a roof for a church in Juarez. A fourth group helped Cambodian families in Nashville adjust to life in America. The program received national and local attention. Nashville's channel 4 followed the South Dakota group and ran a four part series on that group's experience. Students who participated in the program saw it as a positive and rewarding experience.

Alumni Class Officers 1987

Government

The goal of the Alumni Class Officer program is to identify and develop strong alumni leadership during the undergraduate and immediate post-graduate years. In particular, the program strives to create outlets for students and young alumni to use their unique talents and energy for the good of the university and its community.

Chi Chi Chi

Fraternity

Chi Chi Chi, Vanderbilt's only local fraternity, experienced another tremendous year. None of us will ever forget our annual Spring Break trip to toasty Florida which coincided with our President's 21st birthday. It will undoubtedly be remembered as being a rather rusty one, ended by several bankers and our Den-Mom threatening to visit us. On campus we also managed to find time for fun and games, sponsoring numerous parties. Some included such bands as R.E.M.'s opening group, The Urge, while others were off campus. Chi Chi Chi managed to balance this fun with growth, service, and acquisitions. Such a synopsis would be incomplete without mentioning all the late nights spent talking around the pool table, our faculty dinners, sorority mixers, alumni support, computer dating, bananas Foster, and the annual Espionage game. We are looking forward to all this and more in the many years to come. Viva la difference!

UUDDA (V.U.Dungeons & Dragons Assoc.) began campaigning shortly after school started. Despite an unsuccessful freshmen recruiting drive, the group acquired some local talent and adventured on. As planned, the dreaded marathon sessions were minimized, meals were acquired in a more timely fashion, and the riches were greater. Another success was the organizing of a regular meeting to be held at the Xanadu Gaming Convention in downtown Nashville early in the fall. It was a long and excruciating day of gaming, drinking and adventure! Despite a slow spring semester, plans for the summer (which include GENCON 20 in Milwaukee...Worlds largest game convention), and next year look good. BURKARD

A headline in the New York Times in July of 1922 proclaimed, FAILS TO STOP JAZZ, IS ARRESTED LATER. Fortunately for the members of the '86-'87 Vanderbilt Jazz Ensemble playing hot licks is no longer considered a capital offense. The band gave several outstanding concerts, both on and off campus, to an ever increasing audience. Many of the groups talented soloists were featured in music ranging from the swing of Count Basie to the fusion of Spyro-Gyra. Director Joe Laird proclaimed the year a resounding success as the band continues its quest to educate all Vanderbilt types that jazz is not a four letter word.

Mistress of Beasts

KOCH

In an attempt to establish a better working relationship between classical education and normal human existence, Classics 204, under the control of Dr. Barbara Tsakiris, acted out a scene from everyday Minoan life. This time, it is the Master (Mistress) of Beasts Motif, which was a popular jewelry design on ancient Crete around 1800 B.C. It features a human who subdues two huge beasts which are usually lions, tigers, or bears, oh my. In this demonstration Professor Tsakiris acts out the part of the human while students Ken Leslie (huge beast right) and Dave Scott (huger beast left) act out the parts of the ferocious lions. Hopefully, this practical demonstration has prompted the readers to act out his or her own favorite scene from antiquity. It's a vigorous mental activity, yet enlightening.

Vanderbilt Catholic Community

Religious

The Vanderbilt Catholic Community is a diverse group of people centered around weekly masses at Benton Chapel. We mix faith, fun, and friendship all year long. This year, the V.C.C. sponsored a fall dance, a picnic, several retreats, an ice-cream sundae party, an ice-skating party, and an Easter egg hunt. We meet regularly for our Breakfast Club on Wednesdays in the Divinity School and for Catholic College Student's Fun and Fellowship at the Office of University Ministry. We also co-sponsor University events such as the Holocaust Lectures, the Martin Luther King Lectures, and Bible and Beyond Event. Off campus, we support Dismas House and St. Patrick's Shelter. Through these activities, the V.C.C. becomes an integral part of campus life for many students. We are friends-with-a-vision.

Vanderbilt Video Productions

Communication

Vanderbilt Video Productions (VVP) moved from Sarratt tunnels to the basement of the BSA. This was the second year of their existence, and operations have grown quickly. They've helped make videos for bands, the university, and a few select other groups. Once again, problems with copyright laws have slowed the release of the video yearbook. Business opportunities have grown beyond best expectations, and VVP gladly welcomes anyone interested in learning about the video world.

Versus

Communication

MEADOWS

Versus magazine has undergone another change this past year, returning to an older format of general self-indulgent strangeness, while getting away from a brief spell as a news/feature magazine. When it comes out, it has contained some news and features, as well as humor, criticism, analysis, fiction, essay, comics, poetry, art, and photography. Versus has completed 21 years of survival and welcomes anyone, especially writers to help get issues out on time.

Vucept Board

Committee

Stemming from the Latin word, praeceptor which means leader, Vucept is an organization of approximately 400 men and women who assist freshmen and new students during the first week of school and throughout their first year at Vanderbilt. The Vucept Board coordinates the activities of the Vuceptors, especially during orientation.

Students and faculty participating in Wilderness Skills attended six outings: two white-water canoe trips, two rock-climbing trips, one spelunking trip, and one winter backpacking trip. The group usually travels to Stone Door Gulf State Park, Natchala River, sections of North Carolina and Tennessee, and to Lost Creek Cave and Indian Grave Point.

WRVU Staff

Communication

The year for WRVU 91 Rock, Vanderbilt's Alternative Radio Station, was a definite success. After getting our feet wet under our new power of 14,500 watts, we at 91 decided to try and conduct ourselves in a quasi-professional manner...well, we tried! Seriously, WRVU did increase the number of Public Service Announcements and grants to accommodate growing Vanderbilt and Middle Tennessee audiences. Our speciality shows continued in their success: Blues, Jazz, 60's tunes, 70's tunes, Bluegrass, Reggae, Soul, Heavy Metal, Classical, and the Local Show (great local talent that can't be heard anywhere else on the FM dial in Nashville). The highlight of WRVU's year was our annual Spring Benefit Concert. This year the money goes to improve the technical aspects of the station, and toward the purchase of a new control board. The Exit/In provided a great setting and we could not keep the people out! WRVU had its first ever all-ages show to keep in tune with our growing teenage audience. The show featured music by Social Circle, Faith Like a Guillotine, and Johnny Panic & The Bible of Dreams. At the regular show, local talent was showcased as The Questionares, The Grinning Plowmen, Jet Black Factory, Raging Fire, and Bill Lloyd rocked Exit/In. Also, WRVU had a very successful T-shirt sale at the Benefit. So, if you want to be part of WRVU, check us out in the Tunnel of Sarratt-rest assured you can find something to do. If you're not interested in helping out, tune us in at 91.1 on your FM dial. Check out the station with pretty-good-music-some-of-the-time. Take a chance with 91 Rock: Just Say Yes!

Dana Gelin A&S'90 and Wally Hubert A&S'90

CURRY

By Buster Olney

There's something terribly reassuring about freshmen. Always wide-eyed, optimistic, still possessing those wonderful feelings about love, life, and the future, feelings that all upperclassmen remember.

Of course, upperclassmen refer to those feelings as stupidity. They know better. I was probably the most naive of all freshmen. After all, it was my first time away from Mom, my first time in a city, and my first time with my own budget. I was doomed.

On my first day, the airlines lost 12 of my 13 pieces of luggage. Luckily, the one suitcase they did manage to keep track of included all the necessities — a wiffleball bat, six Civil War books, baseball cards, and a nerf football. The rest of my luggage — including all the dumb stuff, like clean clothes — had been rerouted to Taiwan.

Then the cabbie correctly figured me as stupid and charged me $40 for the six-mile trip to Vanderbilt. And I gave him a $10 tip.

My Vuceptor located me when I got on campus and took me to my room. We passed Kissam Quad. We circled Branscomb. He took me to Vanderbilt Hall. "You got stuck here," he said laughing. "Good luck!"

No problem, I thought. It can't be that bad.

My roommate, who had arrived a day earlier and had enjoyed a full 24 hours at Vanderbilt, told me he hated it here and was thinking about transferring or killing himself.

Still didn't phase me. After all, I was going to enjoy the full scope of this wonderful learning experience. I had carefully selected a class schedule that would best meet my learning needs and my demanding time schedule: two writing courses, a history course, math, and a little Spanish.

On registration day, I was bumped from all but one of my choices. I didn't learn.

There were a couple of nice looking girls in my first class. Judging from the way they shifted in their seats, I began to believe they were interested in me. I learned their names during the roll and figured they were doing the same with my name.

I was right. On the fourth day of class, the beautiful blonde in front of me got up her gumption and turned around.

"Buster...", she said musing. "Isn't that a dog's name?"

It was a short-lived relationship.

Over the summer, I had meticulously made up a daily schedule. I planned to study, recreate, and go to class a certain amount of time each day.

I was not mature enough to include in my grand scheme perhaps the most important time-consuming factor known to mankind, and especially college students.

Procrastination.

And so procrastination began to spread over my schedule, soon pushing out class attendance and study time. My recreational habits began to melt in with procrastination.

By the close of my freshmen year, I was on academic probation, owed thousands of dollars to Domino's Pizza because of bounced checks, and I was suffering from social rigor mortis.

But I was certainly the better for it. After all, I was no longer naive, no longer innocent, and I no longer held any ridiculous expectations for myself.

I was no longer a freshman. □

CURRY

By Howard Wilson

Sophomore year comes and you're fully Vanderbilt. Freshman year, that year of initiation, wasn't so bad. You made some good friends, tried to keep your grade point average from sinking to nothing, and maybe even went Greek. Now it's time to take advantage of your new status. Maybe you arrive a bit early to Vucept or just to see the people you missed over the summer. Moving in wasn't so fun, though. Lottery looked you in the face and ordered you to live on campus. Only the lucky few escaped Peabody or Alumni Lawn.

But your housing is the least of your fears as you settle into your fraternity or sorority life. The year has barely begun and you're doing what last year's class did — looking ahead to Spring Rush. You're taking freshmen to football games or out to lunch. New faces drop by and pretty soon you've made new friends. Time spent at "the house" increases. You eat meals there, and if you become an officer, sleep there.

Suddenly, the full realization of G.P.A. worry begins to hit. You've got to pull up your grades, but then that's nothing because before the end of the spring semester you have to declare a major, thus plotting the rest of your Vanderbilt career. And how far along are your College Program in Liberal Education requirements? Things slowly gel. But then, just as the heat seems off, lottery's back. Junior points feature a major step in the lottery game. But you can't live off campus because of the enforcement of on-campus housing by Associate Dean of Housing Stephen Caldwell. So you head for the roaches and cubby holes in Carmichael Towers, Morgan House, or Mayfield, but at least you have a kitchen.

After a year of salvaging grades, meeting new people, and preparing for the next year, time has flown, and your spring exams are over.

For those who don't believe in the Sophomore Slump," you'd better finish your freshman year with a smile and lots of luck. □

Egbert Dimple ENG'88 and Fawn Schwinn UND'88

CURRY

By Howard Wilson

For the Vanderbilt student, the junior year is certainly the most important. Social life has been conquered, and now the former neophyte can languish in thoughts of academia. It is now time to concentrate on the major. Some, however, find this difficult — changing from school to school and subject to subject until finally something seems right.

The junior, however, has much more than a major to worry about. By this time most students have completed the College Program in Liberal Education classes and may now be looking beyond the scope of a Vanderbilt undergraduate education. G.R.E., M.C.A.T., L.S.A.T., and C.P.P.S. become favorite acronyms. The search also begins for that perfect summer internship that will be an extra impressive resume element.

For some students, this year may be an extreme change of scenery. While a few choose to leave the country for a year overseas, more tend to take advantage of the theme dorms on campus — McGill, the philosophy dorm; McTyeire, the international dorm; or Confederate, the arts dorm. And for those who choose to be more conventional, the housing can't get worse. Some choose to move to the suburbs of Mayfield, Morgan or Chaffin while others stay closer to things in Carmichael Towers.

The junior year is a strengthening year. Roots with friends deepen. Contact among students in the same major increases. And incredibly, the junior may not even look forward to the end of his next year when he must finally leave Vanderbilt. □

SENIORS

Class of 1987

Michelle Teofan A&S'87 and David Crenshaw A&S'87

By Buster Olney

After three years of college, it becomes perfectly clear. Academically speaking, nothing really matters any more to seniors.

Got a paper due? blow it off. Turn it in late. Losing two points on a paper that's only 10% of a grade in a three-hour course means virtually nothing in a 120-hour college curriculum.

Got an eight o'clock class? Don't go — you'll copy the notes from somebody else — or just go late. Hey, so what if you interrupt the class — the professor's getting paid, anyway.

Going to graduate school? So what — they really only look at grades through your first three years anyway.

Got a test? No problem — just check back with another student who has taken the class, and they'll find a past model for you to study.

By your senior year, you've got scouting reports on every professor. You know which professors don't like making up new tests, and which ones will never use the same question twice. You've learned which ones take attendance and which ones never bother to learn your name. You've learned that no "death-in-the-family" excuse ever works. In fact, blunt honesty — "I blew it off to go drinking, and remember you did that too?" — seems to be the best policy.

Socially you're locked in. You're a member of a fraternity or sorority or you despise them. Or you live in McGill.

After three years, the freshmen look younger and younger, like the eighth and ninth graders used to look like back in high school.

You've stopped cracking jokes about Rand food. You just swallow hard.

You aren't afraid of ROTC students or football players anymore.

Since you've started school, tuition has gone up 40 percent, and you still haven't seen the Chancellor on campus. Or anywhere for that matter. In fact, the first time you see him is at your graduation.

Some seniors think about the future, and some avoid thinking about it at all. Engineers have their tax refund for the next 10 years invested. They've ordered their car and are planning to raise a family of 2.2 children.

Liberal arts majors, on the other hand, are wondering what the hell their going to do with a history degree — sit around and wait for stuff to happen?

But perhaps the most conspicuous part about being a senior is the aura. A senior. No one admits to dating a freshman. They respect a senior. □

Fit for the Future.

Perseverance. Striving for what is better. Challenging the status quo. Hospital Corporation of America is committed to improving health care. Trying what hasn't been tried. Doing what hasn't been done. All to find new ways of providing quality care at a reasonable cost. Because, in the long run, bettering the human condition is the greatest good any individual or group can achieve. Hospital Corporation of America salutes Vanderbilt University for its commitment to excellence in shaping the future of its students. And we extend congratulations to the graduates of the class of 1986.

WHO WOULD EVER GUESS YOU'D BE SUCH A HIGH ROLLER?

Maybe you don't hang out at the track or put the mortgage on the line in Vegas. But without disability insurance you're betting against the odds with the biggest asset you own – your ability to earn an income. And if your income were to stop tomorrow, how would you pay the bills? Or put the kids through school? Or maintain the lifestyle you've worked so hard to earn?

Why gamble with something so important? Call PROVIDENT, the nation's leader in individual, non-cancellable disability insurance. With Provident's individual disability plans, you protect the pleasures, and the necessities, of life. That way, if disability strikes, you'll still have an adequate monthly income to protect your lifestyle.

And what would happen to your business if you were disabled? Do you really want to risk double-or-nothing? Instead call PROVIDENT for the latest on business buy-out plans, overhead expense protection, and "Master Key" coverage for valuable employees.

Provident's PROTEKTION COLLECTION offers the most comprehensive disability protection on the market today. And you can always count on prompt, fair payment of your claims thanks to a Provident tradition that now spans a full century of insurance protection and service.

So the choice is yours. If you really feel lucky, you can let it ride. Or you can call the Provident office nearest you.

Community Roots. Community Leadership.

High tech with a human touch.

This phrase has become Nashville Memorial's hallmark. One that exemplifies a standard of up-to-the-minute health care technology while retaining person-to-person care.

All hospitals offer competent, responsible care for patients. But there is a difference. Nashville Memorial is a community hospital. That difference is reflected in the fact that our responsibility is to our neighbors; not to stockholders, nor to a board or management group in a distant city.

To find out more about our services and education programs, call our information line: 865-3511. For emergencies or after-hours medical treatment, call our Emergency number: 865-3485.

NOT JUST ANOTHER
CONDOMINIUM!

On the corner of South Street and 19th Avenue, South, it rises — a multi-faceted form. University Square. Encircled by the creative beat of Music Row and the academic air of the Vanderbilt campus. Condominiums that capture the shape and shadow of the upward mobile lifestyle. A statement of the future with excitement.

University Square Condominiums. A strong visual structure. Secure. An eloquent expression of the people who live there. They are smart planners. Not satisfied with campus housing or apartment rentals. For the college student — the ultimate experience. For parents — the tax benefits of ownership and equity appreciation. For people who know what they want.

University Square Condominiums:

- Convenient location — adjacent to the Universities
- Guards on duty 24 hours; remote TV monitoring
- Enclosed parking on lower levels
- Spectacular views of downtown skyline and Vanderbilt campus
- 3 glass-backed elevators
- Private balconies
- All appliances — laundry facilities
- Building fully sprinklered

- One-bedroom units — $65,000
- Two-bedroom units — from $129,500
- Penthouses with private terraces — $325,000
- 25% / Fixed rate / 30-year financing available
- Lease purchase plans available on selected units

Models open 10 a.m.-6 p.m. daily.

100 YEARS YOUNG

A great university never grows old. The vitality of Vanderbilt's young men and women has kept the University charged with youthful energy for an entire century. We congratulate you...and we wish you a Happy Birthday.

But for you graduating seniors, don't let that excitement end at commencement. Find a career with a company that keeps the flame of learning fueled. Somewhere like Monsanto. Because a life that's bright with opportunity stays forever young.

For information concerning technical career opportunities with Monsanto, contact the Placement Office for our on campus interview schedule, or write to: G.E. Wiley, Monsanto Company, Mail Zone F4EE, 800 N. Lindbergh Blvd., St. Louis, MO 63167. An Equal Opportunity Employer M/F/H/V.

RNs, imagine a hospital...

that provides an environment where your personal contributions can be felt and appreciated. An environment that rewards you with professional challenge and support. One with a new participative management system.

Imagine a preceptor program for all new nursing staff and a 12-month orientation program for new graduates that includes monthly workshops focused on your special needs.

Imagine Blount Memorial Hospital. A modern facility with an energetic nursing division.

You can take advantage of an excellent tuition assistance program for continuing education in your specialty area. And because your ideas are valuable, your involvement in management, leadership and decision making are encouraged. You will grow to your fullest potential and still receive a competitive salary and other critical benefits.

We want to hear from you. Feel free to call collect. Joan Jackson, Assistant Administrator, will be happy to answer your questions and talk about your particular needs.

Just-in-time flow-through parts terminal

Free-electron laser laboratory

Award-winning college research center

Austin creates the facilities where tomorrow begins.

High technology keeps recreating the future.

Today it is space vehicles, compact discs and miracle drugs. Tomorrow it will be free-electron lasers, replaceable human organs and biochemically enhanced foods.

The Austin Company is deeply involved in designing, engineering and constructing the facilities that generate these exciting developments. While others dream about the future, Austin is helping to create it.

High technology originates in the laboratory. Austin plans and implements many of the advanced experimental centers where tomorrow begins. In this field of R&D facilities, Austin enjoys global preeminence.

In processing, manufacturing and distribution facilities, Austin is also working at the state of the art, and often beyond. Example: The space shuttle logistics processing facility. Example: The world's largest pharmaceutical laboratory. Example: The first just-in-time flow-through parts terminal.

Austin also enjoys a long association with institutions of higher education, effectively transferring its industrial and commercial expertise to the design of academic facilities. Austin's single-source responsibility offers singular benefits to organizations concerned today with creating tomorrow. The Austin Company, Cleveland, Ohio 44121.

The Last Word

What a year! It's now the end of July, and I'm finally beginning to see the light at the end of the tunnel (literally). Thanks to my staff — Paku, Di, Bill B., Paul, Jenn, Meg, Dave, Bill K., Kev, Rachel, George, Hollis, Melissa, Jen, Mariesa, Joan, and everyone else who contributed — for a job well done. Not many people would have given up their summer vacations or grade point averages for a book, but these people showed a dedication unsurpassed by any other students I know. Thanks also to my family who filled in all the gaps and who seemed to understand when I stayed out past curfew. Most of all, when you flip through the pages now, and then turn them again with your grandchildren fifty years from now, I hope the images created here refresh your memory of the past year. Now it's time for me to become a normal person again and get rid of my tunnel tan. Bye ya'll.

Colophon

The 101st edition of the Vanderbilt Commodore was published on 504, 9x12 pages by Hunter Publishing Company. The book was paid for by a meager sum from every undergraduate and was produced by an entire staff of volunteer undergraduates. Non-staff photographs include class pictures by Varden Studios in Rochester, New York. Photos were produced using offset lithography with a 150-line elliptical dot screen. All copy and headlines were set in Baskerville. Black and white film was 35mm Tri-X, T-Max, Plus-X, and 120mm Plus-X developed by numerous techniques to achieve an exposure index of 200-1600. Color film was 35mm Kodak Ektachrome and Fujichrome from E.I. 100-1600. If you have any questions, just write: The Commodore, Box 1517-B, Nashville, TN 37235.
